WAS RECEIVED

By QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY COUNCIL.

Principal Gordon Met This Important Body - Chancellor Fleming's Remarks - Dr. Gordon Delivers an Important Address.

A meeting of Queen's University Council was held on Monday afternoon to extend a greeting to Principal Gordon, Sir Sanford Fleming, and to deliver an address to the council. Its reference to Principal Gordon was in these words: "In receiving our new principal, on behalf of the university council, we extend to him the most cordial greetings."

The chancellor gave a most interesting story of the progress of the university since its foundation. He said that its change of constitution did not imply that there would be any break in the friendly relations between the university and its mother church.

Principal Gordon's Address. In replying, Principal Gordon spoke at some length. The most of his address is given below. He said: "I am grateful for this opportunity of addressing you and of coming into closer touch with you as members of the university."

One who never turned his back, but marched bravely forward. Never desisted, though right were worst. He would not be daunted by the fall of a hero, nor by the fall of a nation. He would not be daunted by the fall of a nation. He would not be daunted by the fall of a nation.

Supreme encouragement in accepting the office vacated by his long friend is found in God's promise to Joshua, when calling him to succeed the great leader. "As I will be with thee, so will I be with thee."

After discussing the functions of a university, and the need for a general culture rather than mere specialization, Principal Gordon closed his address in trying to encourage the course of studies to be pursued by those who seek its guidance.

chemistry, biology, mineralogy and kindred subjects, you are not only reaching results that may have a direct bearing upon material progress, but you are also increasing your general culture, and you are enjoying in work of a high educational value.

"Our modern modes of thought and life tend more and more to emphasize the sciences, and thus the boundaries of university education have necessarily been widened, until we are perplexed by the number and variety of subjects to be mastered. And yet, however eager a student might be to annex all possible realms of knowledge, the function and purpose of university training is not to store up in every kind of information, but to direct him in such studies as shall most surely tend to develop the man himself.

"I think we may claim that this has always been the ideal of Queen's. In trying to realize this ideal Queen's has put forth her efforts to serve the country in the most effective ways frequently taking the initiative in higher educational movements.

Through her technical education she has been able to take advantage of facilities otherwise provided for this purpose. Thus the school of Applied Science, Mining and agriculture, which through private gifts and government assistance, has been established at Kingston and which is an affiliation with Queen's, furnishes the technical training desired by many of the university students.

There are also other interests that might well ask the university for light and leading men of other callings that might ask what we can do for them for their work so that they may be equipped to assist in the building up of the nation.

As with general culture, so with technical training, the university should stand ready to extend its help in all possible ways, careful to place its aid in the hands of those who are worthy to receive it.
