Talks by FOR By a Farmer

The expressed dissatisfaction long sermons and prayers seems general, and so, in reverting to hope I am, like a motion to ad always in order. It was just one Sunday that I listened clergyman pray until I began to there would be no-time left for sermon. He was a generous and so he prayed for everybody everything. The contrast between prayer and Peter's was very in "Lord, save me, or I perish!" the apostle's supplication. Shrove to the point it was, and Christ answered it immediately. Had Peter tently he would have drowned he could possibly have finished tenth of it.

Members of President Commission. The victorious officers decided to hold a grand banquet on the night in honor of their achievements. Parson Moody, chaplain to Gen. Peppercell, a course, had to be invited. He noted for his fierceness and his prayers, and many, dreading his prayer, fled away from them. But, in this case, it was expected that happened. To the surprise of everyone Parson Moody requested as guest of honor for the following Lord's dinner.

This has been called the young men, yet none of the prodigies of our day have plied aught worthy of comparison with the precocious achievement of Alexander and Napoleon. Fox swaggered about at the age of twenty-one, a lord of the age and a thorn in the side of God, and later his great rival, Pitt, a lad of twenty-three, the office of the chancellor of chequer, becoming premier of the following year. In an issue of the Munsey Magazine the triumphs of the great men in are dealt with from Alexander Macedon and Edward, the Prince to Napoleon and Pitt, age of thirty Alexander was for more worlds to conquer; the Black Prince, fought with at Crecy at the age of twenty and Napoleon commanded the army in Italy at the age of seven.

The roll call of youth in before the term was made to almost all ages under the three score and ten, the one. Splendid picturesque ing all of them were from a shepherd boy who began his life as king at eighteen, to finishing his tragic, chivalric age, from Alexander the Great, the splendid, insoluble swinging all the eastern world the circle of the Greek power, for he was thirty-three, watched his grandmothers steaming and bubbling stove, and so made Napoleon steam engine as we know it, and so on, sweeping the from Italy before he was twenty, to Rafael, who at thirty finished his deathless work; the master of Mexico at thirty, the Schuberl, who died at
