Old English Records.

Strange tales are told of how important documents have gone astray. The groom's gift to the bride was a in England, says The Daily Express. A few years ago an inspector employed by the Historical Manuscripts Commission went to Belvoir Castle.

"I came across a key," he writes, bearing a label with the words, 'Key of writings over stable.' I accordingly repaired to the stable, and there, in a loft under the roof, dis covered a vast mass of old papers. No one had entered the room for some years, and a curtain of cobwebs hung from the rafters. Over everything there was a thick layer of broken plaster, and dirt.

Flanagan hung back, but the cirus proprietor prodded him with a word and threatened to run him through, and the "lion" was driven into the same cage with the tiger. There he backed into a corner and cried, "Sphare me!"

Then the ferocious tiger jumped to his feet and answered, "Ye needn't be afraid o' me! I'm an Irishman

How "Old Moore" Began.

"Old Moore" of London is the great almanac compiler, but as to whether that is his correct cognomen cannot be said. There is a story told that he was a struggling winter somewhere in the region of Fleet street many years ago, and one day having the 'ump he dropped round to his favorite "boozer" for a pals, and he gargled so often, that "Divvy" up the quinme pills. like the lady in a poem when bemoaning her lover, he "forgot the stars, the moon and the sun." to press. The printer's devil was him informed him that he had forgotten to say what kind of weather The prophet told the devil to take his anatomy out of his sight, and to my it would snow or anything else he liked. And snow it was, "Snow" was put opposite the vacant date, and the prediction came true, and so the fame of the almanac went throughout the land.
