Queer man that dear old boy. Small, fidgety, a pack of restless nerves, he jerks out his words, with sharp, spasmodic jests, like so many little stabs into the brain of his auditor, He is on the sun-ny side of sixty, though he looks twenty years older. His bald, glossy head, skirted very low with a bush of straggling white hair, standing on end, has a very expressive face. His eyes, like slits, through which sparkle two black diamonds, are deep set, lost in baggy lids and is clean-shaved and his lips, thin and
