France's Costly Colony.

President Loubet, perhaps stimulated by the example of Mr. Chamberlain, is about to undertake a long tour of inspection in Algeria. He wil examine the centres of colonization. will visit the Kabyle tribes, will hold chiefs, and will study for himself the colony. The precise object of usual journey is not stated. The Algerians, white and brown, have many grievances, some of which the presi is a man of business capacity, and we should imagine that his chief wis would be to ascertain whether great cost of Algeria to France could not be diminished. Large reduction are inevitable if the French budget to be fully adjusted, and some them must be contributed by the co onial department. There is little hope venue, for the French are not colon ists, and as little of a reduction in the cost of the garison, for they killed out their hope that they may Algeria gives employment to as man white troops as all Northern India
