More Ground For Hope For His Capt. Bernier, who undertakes to discover the Pole for $120,000, has pervaded the Parliament Buildings ever since the session opened at Ot-Ottawa with a sort of understanding that if he collected $60,000 the Government of Canada would see that he got $60,000 more from the public purse. More Hopeful Than Ever. This session he comes back to the House of Commons with $20,000 worth more hope than he had last year. He will not soficit subscriptions any longer. He will solicit influence. He buttonholes members of Parliament. He seeks interviews with members of the Cabinet. He has converted the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is a Frenchman. like himself, and who has ambitions. as everybody knows, to enlarge the scope of his department. The Minister of Marine listens very kindly to Capt: Bernier's deputation, and hints that the captain's dearest wish may be gratified. The captain is so jolly, so patient withal, that nobody finds him a bore. He has abandoned the silk het as unsuited to Arctic work, and he now appears in a soft hat, brown and jaunty. He goes about on the coldest days without coat or gloves. He expands his chest. He glows with warmth, He who runs may read that here is a man who will find Arctic regions as tolerable as tropic suns. It is a matter of regret that March was not colder, so that all could see how he stands it. A waggish American who saw him rushing about in light marching order said to him: Bernier, if they saw you in my country going round without an overcoat in this weather, they'd think that you meant it, and send you to the Pole."

"Ah," said the captain, "if they would only believe here I'd do without a Waistcoat!" Making an Impression.

And gradually Parliament is coming to believe. This hardy little sailor, who doesn't make more of a zero day than you or I do of the first of July, begins to impress the House of Commons as being sincere and reasonable. No icy heart repels him. No frosty face sets him back. The members say, "If he freezes to us this way, how much harder he will freeze to the North Pole." . The earnestness of this ruddy little sea captain to discover something that hasn't six per cent. on the face of it suggests to the most practical that fame is better than money, and that some men burn to carry out the A. Moss. for plaintiff, appealed from brave dreams that most of us forget with our boyhood's toys. It is understood that Sir Wilfrid Laurier favors the plans of his jovial compatriot. Capt. Bernier's dash for the Pole will come up in the House of Commons, and the probabilities are that Canada will Invite her soul for the nonce by handing the captain a hundred thousand dollars and a God-speed. Then the captain will have the ship built in British Columbia, taking care to have it double. trussed with green heart, And after that he will provision it with tins of pea soup and man it with good French-Canadians, chosen from the famous crew of the "Julie Plante," -H.
