No Such Understanding. In view of the general assembly's decision to retain Queen's there are Quartette Of Drunks Arrainged few people, and decidedly few, who are asking the question if the recent city grant of $50,000 was not given on the understanding that the university was to be separated from the Presbyterian church. There was no such understanding, although mention might have been made of the fact that such steps were being taken. So they were and the university authorities did everything possible towards separation. The general assembly had the veto power, and used it. As to the city grant, it was made more in business way. The university's growth would benefit Kingston, and, therefore, a grant was a matter of civic investment. Queen's arts' and medical department were considered entirely undenominational as was clearly shown by interviews with clergymen and laymen of all churches.
