The proceedings were absolutely tame, no applause or counter-demonstration, a queer ending to a debate which brought forth extraordinary feelings and features.

Then worry arose over the subsidy bill for the Canada Central railway, for seventy miles from French river to Sudbury. The project came forward at the last hour, and was thus open to objection, but the surprise was the protest of a government supporter, Mr. Pettypiece, against further total. Then a second surprise eventuated, when Mr. Whitney attacked the preceding speaker for false independence and general "cussedness" apparently, and declared he was going to support the government proposal, as a measure promising British capital useful colonization.
