AN ENGLISH VIEW OF IT.

The English view of the Canadian preference is not an inviting one. The Sheffield Independent presents it in an article of unusual terseness and power, and it is the reflection of the editor's observations during a recent visit to Canada. The British delegates to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, are home, and the majority of them may say that something must be done in order that Canadian opinion may be satisfied. But "the fact is that they have been all the while in contact with the manufacturers of Ontario, who are desperately anxious that England should help them to play, and should pay for playing, a deep commercial game with the farmers of the west."

THE CRISIS IN ENGLAND.

The break between the Duke of Devonshire and Mr. Balfour has been the event of the political season. The marvel of it is how men of strong passions, and on the fiscal question so diametrically opposed to each other, managed to avoid the rupture so long. When Mr. Chamberlain made his dash for liberty, when he decided that the time had come for a change of programme, when he precipitated action by his premeditated declarations in regard to a preferential tariff, the crisis came. The government was at once lacerated in trouble, in disunion. The Duke of Devonshire, a free trader by instinct and education, a liberal with family and social traditions that bound him irrevocably, at once went on strike. He was in advance of Lord George Hamilton and Mr. Ritchie in tendering his resignation. It was not accepted and for reasons that are now apparent. Mr. Balfour realized the peril of letting the duke go. They talked the situation over. The premier condescended to recognize him as his most distinguished colleague. He was willing to make some concessions to amend his mind if not his policy, to make compromises in the interest of peace. He eventually placated the old liberal and free trader, and sought to keep him in harmony by consulting him about the cabinet changes.

At Sheffield, however, Mr. Balfour lost his hold on the duke. He went too far in his assertions. He repudiated free trade, he alleged that it was no longer the need of the nation, and he boldly intimated that he would, if he could, revise the fiscal conditions of the country and adopt protection. Some of his colleagues were willing to risk the consequences, but the Duke of Devonshire revolted and demanded an immediate release from office. The premier, piqued, nettled, angered, wrote a testy reply. It has widened the breach between him and the duke.

The crisis has been made acute. The government has been weakened by the men who have left it and the men who have joined it. There is no help for it but go to the country soon, and before the electors have heard enough about the new ideas to be able to judge of them intelligently.

LEGACY TO THE WORLD.

This month the 41st anniversary of John Wesley is being observed in the Methodist churches of Canada. The aim is to raise the spiritual life of the people, by special services, and to crown them with contributions aggregating about a quarter of a million dollars for missions. Wesley's influence will never die. It grows with the years and spreads as the spirit of Methodism finds fresh scope for its expansion.

This month, too, sees the observance of another bi-centenary, that of Jonathan Edwards, the most noted preacher and metaphysician of his time. It is said that when his father looked upon him as a child, the only son in a family of five, he said, "This is the gift of God; we'll name him Jonathan." And Jonathan Edwards became one of the most famous men of his time.

Edith A. Winship, in the World's Work, has attempted to trace the effect of his life upon the American nation. She points out that he was the founder of a really wonderful family, a family that has, up to the present, numbered about 1,400, and a family that has had, among its representatives, public officials, physicians, lawyers, judges, college professors and presidents, and all of these men of mark. The high standard of service and distinction was set in the first generation by the sons and daughters of Jonathan Edwards. They were left orphans when six of them were under twenty-one. "The inheritance on which was founded this success in life was entirely one of keen intellect and fine moral character. Their best equipment was an excellent home training, due to the mother, a woman of beauty, charming nature, and great good sense."

Kate M. Cone, in the Outlook, credits the mother largely with the character building in the man. She guarded his youth, so that the expectancies of the average boy never entered into his existence. It is the secret of many a happy life. Three handsome young men, full of vigour and activity, were executed the other day in New York State for a crime, the climax of many crimes, resulting from laxity or youthful discipline, "the sinking of the monitor and guide in the indulgent mother-servant."

If the observance of the bi-centenary of really great men have any effect it will be to accentuate their lives, their service, their sacrifices in behalf of their fellows. "The theology of Jonathan Edwards may be dead," says Miss Winship, "and his books unread, but the man was greater than the theologian. In having to his children, and his children's children, the legacy that he gave he did the best a man can do for the world."

DESPERATE MAN FIRES TWO SHOTS AT ROLL GATE KEEPER.

Also Set Fire To a Hay Stack to Attract Attention While He Robbed the Dwelling House—A Desperado at Work.

William Ferguson, a township of Kingston farmer, residing about five miles from the city, on the Perth Road, was in the police station this morning telling of an outrage committed on his farm about dusk on Tuesday. Mr. Ferguson, aided by neighbors, had been threshing, and, finished, he and his wife went to bed, as he was unwell. Shortly after sundown he heard a shot fired, and the rest of the household rushed out to see what caused the noise, taking care to leave both front and rear doors open, to facilitate retreat.

Mr. Ferguson, lying sick in another part of the house, heard some one moving around, rummaging through cupboards and drawers, but did not suspect that a thief was operating. When the remainder of the family returned, the thief calmly took his departure; he was seen going away, but too great a start to be apprehended. It was found that he had brought in from the wood shed a sharp axe and laid it on the table, ready for use in case of need. Mr. Ferguson is convinced that the desperado intended striking down with the axe anyone who might have disturbed him in his operations. It is evident that the hay stack was set alight and the shot fired to attract attention of those at the house, while the thief ransacked the dwelling at his leisure. So far, nothing of value has been missed.

About a week ago two suspicious characters called on Mr. Ferguson, making some ridiculous enquiries, and finally winding up by demanding something to eat, after having enticed Mr. Ferguson from the house. He thinks that the men intended violence, but seeing two men persons around, delayed their attack. He is thankful that he was not shot down in his tracks there and then.

After having left Mr. Ferguson's house, Tuesday night, the ruffian started towards the city, and at the toll gate entered the house and attempted to hold up the gate keeper, W. Waller, an old man about seventy years of age. Suddenly confronting the aged gate keeper, he pushed a revolver in his face and demanded that Waller throw up his hands. In reply Mr. Waller picked up a tin pail and hurled it at the head of the intruder, who fired point blank at Mr. Waller, but fortunately the bullet went wide. Again the man demanded that Mr. Waller throw up his hands, and a second time the demand was refused. At this stage, Mrs. Waller appeared and attacked the fellow, who fired a second shot at Mr. Waller and then ran out the front door, heading towards the city.

It is presumed that the desperado is an ex-convict, and Mr. Ferguson went out to the Kingston penitentiary to ascertain if a convict answering the description of the man seen around his place had been recently released. The police were furnished with a detail of the man's appearance, and asked to keep a sharp lookout for him.

MONEY AWAITS BOOTH.

But Postal Inspectors in Montreal Cannot Find Him.

Montreal, Oct. 7.—An advertisement has recently been going the rounds of the Canadian newspapers asking for comfortable homes for a number of Scotch boys and girls, ages ranging from fourteen to sixteen years, who would arrive in Montreal about the middle of September. Those desirous of adopting these children had apply to George R. Booth, 79 Bleury street, this city. From all parts of the dominion letters containing money orders have been sent for the purpose of defraying the necessary transportation expense.

The postal officials and inspectors are on the look-out for Mr. Booth, as they have at the present time nine registered letters and 126 ordinary letters addressed to him. These were seized by the inspectors at Mr. Booth's former residence. In the course of their investigation the post office officials discovered that from the latter part of August until September 23rd, Mr. Booth had received twenty-seven registered letters, and innumerable ordinary letters, many of which it is supposed contained money and express orders to defray transportation.

As no immigrant children have arrived from the old country except through the regular channels, the post office officials are anxious to find Mr. Booth for other purposes besides handing him out his mail.

INSURGENTS ACTIVE.

Burned Villages, Looted Cattle, Massacred Turks.

London, Oct. 7.—According to a despatch from Salonica, the insurgents at Raslog have completely attained their object. They have burned villages, looted cattle and massacred the Turkish reinforcements. The number of Turks killed is variously estimated at from 500 to 2,000, including 100 troops. The Bulgarians lost 150 killed.

FAILURE OF FISHING

In Nova Scotia Will Cause Destitution.

Halifax, Oct. 7.—The steamer Propatria, which has arrived at Sydney, brings news that owing to the total failure of the fisheries, many families are seriously contemplating leaving the island of St. Pierre for Canada, or the United States. Several already have reached here, and, within the past three weeks over thirty families have left the island. It is feared that much destitution will prevail during the coming winter among the poorer classes, as the result of the failure of fishing.

The demonstration continued. The inscription on the wreath refers to the three year reserves who have been detained with the colors.

London, Oct. 7.—Mr. McKone, an employee of the Health Food company, of this city, charged with proclamation of the Lord's day, was found guilty and fined by the police magistrate.
