

STOP THAT COUGH!

Colds Lead to Catarrh—Catarrh Leads to Consumption.

A Beautiful Girl's Experience

MISS ALMA LILLIA.

Nine cases of consumption out of ten occur in this way: A person catches a cold. The cold is not properly cured, and they quickly catch another one. This cold is delicately dallied with by no treatment, or some

Miss Lillia, of Illinois, started out exactly in this way. Fortunately, she took a course of Peruna before it was too late. She had caught several colds, then a cough developed. She took all sorts of cough medicines, until, as she puts it, "I sickened at the thought of them." In four weeks Peruna had cured her of her catarrh and her system was entirely rid of it.

This is what Peruna is doing all the while. Not a day, and probably not an hour, passes but some one has a similar experience with Peruna.

The first step toward consumption is catching cold. The next step is a failure to cure it promptly. The third step is the development of catarrh, which gradually becomes chronic. The fourth step, the catarrh begins to spread from the head to the throat. The fifth step, the catarrh spreads to the bronchial tubes and lungs. It then becomes consumption in its first stage.

At any time during the progress of the catarrh, from the first onset of the cold to its final settlement in the lungs, Peruna can be relied upon to stop the disease. It cures entirely. Even after consumption has become thoroughly developed, many cases have found in Peruna a permanent cure. After they have been given up by physicians to die of consumption Peruna has cured them.

We have hundreds of testimonials that declare these facts in the most enthusiastic language. U. S. Senator John M. Thurston, from Nebraska, writes the following letter from Washington, D. C., under date of April 6, 1901:

"I have used Peruna at various times during the past year or two with most satisfactory results. It entirely relieved me from an irritating cough, the result of excessive effort in the Presidential campaign, and I am a firm believer in its efficacy in any such trouble."—Jno. M. Thurston.

To take quieting medicines to stop a cough is absurd and harmful. The only way to stop a cough permanently, and without doing more injury than good is to cure the catarrh, which is exactly what Peruna does. It cures the catarrh of the bronchial tubes and the cough ceases.

At the slightest appearance of a cough a bottle of Peruna should be taken according to directions. One bottle in the beginning will do more than a half dozen bottles after the catarrh has fastened itself on the lungs.

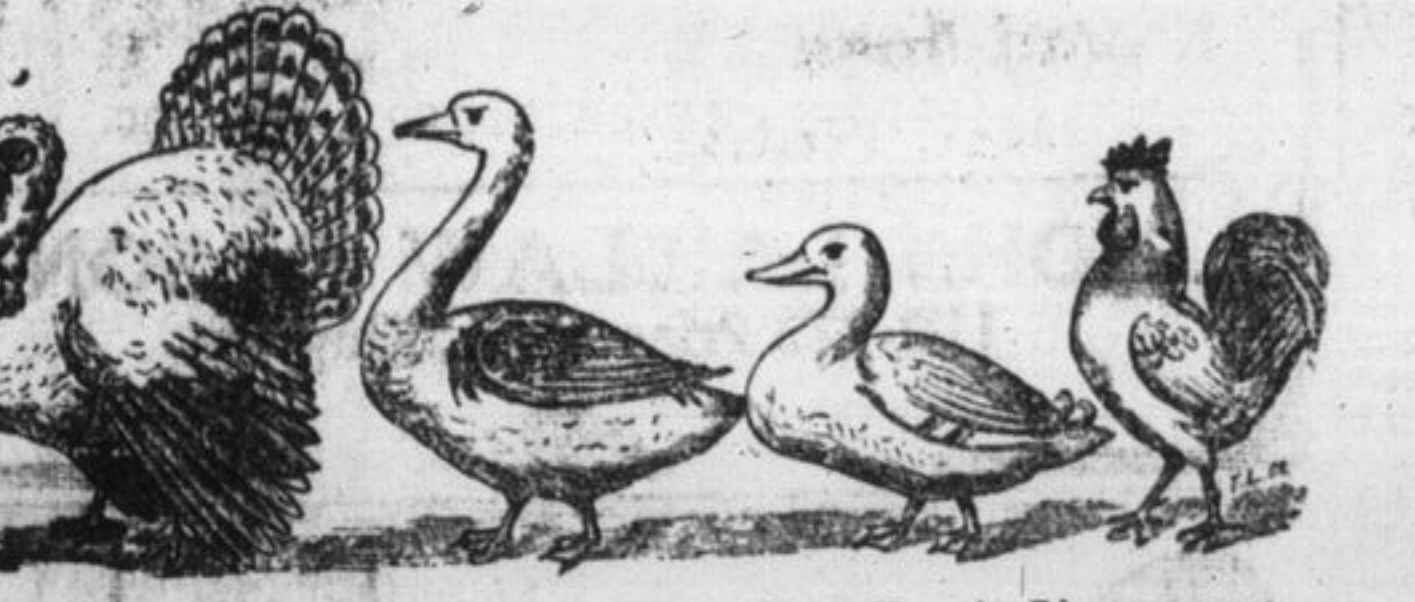

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis. Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, O.

CITY'S WELFARE

WILL BE SERVED BY ELECTING CRAIG MAYOR.

He Did Not Seek The Position—His Service Will Be For The Benefit Of The City And The Citizens.

Kingston, Dec. 26.—(To the Editor): By your kindness I would like to say a few words to the electors about the coming elections for mayor. I do not wish to be harsh about any of the candidates, but the voters know the candidates pretty well, of their success in the business world, and they know also that a man coming out for political purposes has not the right jangle about it.

Regarding Mr. Craig, I think that if the electors elect him to the chair they will never regret it. I have personally known him for many years and can vouch for his being honorable and straight in his transactions, and let me say no living man can buy him or pull him to one side by any stack of complimentary ticket schemes in order that the individual concern may get a chance of robbing the city out of its rights. Alas, too many men seek office, and for favors received do things which are a great injury to our city. Mr. Craig is not one of this kind. He is a man firm in his convictions, and perhaps not always to our way of thinking, but you may depend on it, he is for the city's advancement first, last and all the time.

He is a large employer of labor and a friend of the working man. He pays his men their just due. He has been successful in his calling, and if elected will carry on the city's business in a business way, which from the many bungled transactions of past years has not been the case. Votes, put on your thinking caps. Our city never needed an honorable and can't-be-bought-council more than the coming year.

Look at the question of cheaper light which should interest everyone. Why, if the company are allowed to go on appealing from year to year, the old lighting plant won't be worth half a dime. Again, the people should vote, elect the man whom you think will look after the city best. Don't vote for a man who has to go around begging and praying and almost crying to get there. There is something wrong somewhere. The people should sack the man, and if they did we would have a different city. Give the matter honest consideration and you will mark your X for Craig—ELECTOR.

AN OTTAWA MARRIAGE.

Rev. Dr. Wilson and Miss Harriett Smirle Wedded.

At the residence of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. Daniel K. Cowley, Ottawa, on Thursday evening, took place the marriage of Miss Harriett Hill Smirle, to Rev. Gilbert Wilson, Ph.D., Winnipeg. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. Moore, of Ottawa, in presence of about sixty relatives and intimate friends, including several from Kingston.

The handsome bride was given away by her uncle, R. H. Cowley. Her gown was of white crepe de soie over tulle, with pointed bodice made in graceful folds, berthe of chiffon applique and fringe in shell pattern; train skirt elaborately fringed. She wore the bridal veil and carried white roses and lily of the valley. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Lindsay, who wore coral pink silk muslin over tulle, of the same shade, fringed and trimmed with applique and touches of pink panne velvet. Her flowers were pink roses. Rev. W. G. Wilson, Smith's Falls, brother of the groom, was best man.

The decorations were chiefly those of the Christmas season, holly and mistletoe, and also cut flowers, palms and plants. After the ceremony a reception was held. At eleven o'clock Dr. and Mrs. Wilson left on a honeymoon trip to Toronto and Chicago, thence proceeding to their future home in the city of the west, Winnipeg. The groom's gift to the bride was a gold watch studded with diamonds, and to the bride-aid, a pearl cross pendant. The bride received a large and beautiful array of presents.

Sincere wishes for her future happiness are extended to Mrs. Wilson by her host of Kingston friends whom she made during her arts' course at Queen's University, of which she is one of the most brilliant girl graduates, an admirably fitted to fill the prominent place that awaits her in Winnipeg.

THEY SMOKED.

GREAT MEN WHO USED THE WEED

And What They Had To Say About It—Some Interesting Facts Brought Forward.

It has always been one of the chief virtues of tobacco that it lends itself readily to anecdote. When a great man is also a great smoker he of necessity falls at times into that commonplace condition of mind which paves the way for story and reminiscence, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune.

Sir Walter Raleigh, the "pioneer of the smoking world," was a heavy smoker. His tobacco box was of cylindrical form, measuring about seven inches in diameter and thirteen in height. The outside was of gilt leather, and within was a cavity for a receiver of glass or metal, which would hold about a pound of tobacco. A species of collar, that connected the receiver with the case, was pierced with holes for the reception of pipes, of which the gallant knight possessed a huge number.

The great Napoleon could never be brought to take tobacco. It is related that on a certain occasion the Persian ambassador presented him with an exquisite oriental pipe, and the emperor made heroic attempts to enjoy the smoking process, but finally abandoned the business in disgust. Here is the story recorded by one of the court:

"Fire having been brought, it only remained to communicate it to the tobacco, but that could not be effected by the method which his majesty adopted. He merely opened and shut his mouth, without attempting to draw in his breath. 'O the devil,' he cried, at length. 'There will be no end to this business.' I observed to him that he did it half heartedly, and showed him how he ought to begin. Wearing by his vain efforts, he at last desired me to light the pipe. I obeyed, and gave it to him. But scarcely had he drawn in a mouthful than the smoke which he knew not how to expel turned back into his palate, penetrated his nose, and blinded him. As soon as he recovered his breath he roared: 'Take that away from me. What abomination! O the vile, vile, vile—my stomach turns.' In fact, he felt himself so incommoded for at least an hour that he renounced forever the pleasure of the habit, which he said was only fit to amuse slugs."

Blucher, an opponent whose presence at Waterloo, Napoleon had good cause to remember, was, on the other hand, an inveterate smoker, and rarely went into action without a pipe or cigar between his teeth. So huge was his collection of pipes that he actually hired a person to superintend the heterogeneous mass, and the pipe master, Christian Hennemann by name, discharged his duties with a fidelity that approached fanatical zeal. Before evening on Thursday, Prince Elcher usually ordered a long pipe to be filled. After smoking for a short time he would hand back the lighted pipe to Hennemann, place himself on the saddle, draw his sabre, and with the vigorous cry, "Forward, my boys," throw himself fiercely on the foe. On the day of Waterloo, Hennemann had just handed a pipe to his master when a cannon ball struck the ground near, so that earth and sand covered Blucher and his grey horse. The steed made a spring to one side and the new pipe was broken before the prince had taken a single puff. However, the latter merely cried: "Fill another pipe for me, and keep it lighted for moment, and I will drive away these French rascals." Thereupon there was a rush forward, but the pursuit lasted not merely a moment, but throughout the whole of that long and memorable day.

It is a highly curious fact that no allusion to tobacco is to be found in the works of Shakespeare, though various of his contemporaries indulge in many sallies, chiefly at his expense of the lately imported weed. Perhaps the poet's action in thus ignoring tobacco may be attributed to the fact that James I., with whom the bard was a high favorite, hated and loathed Sir Walter Raleigh's importation. In this connection it is amusing to remember that another poet of a later day, Alarion Swinburne, has told us that "James I was a knave, a tyrant, a fool, a liar and a coward; but I love him, I worship him, because he slit the throat of that black-guard Raleigh, who invented filthy smoking."

The late Lord Tennyson was a lover of clay pipes and preferred Virginia tobacco to any other growth of the weed. He invariably smoked whilst at work and followed a method peculiar to himself in the selection of pipes. At his feet was placed a box full of white clays. Filling one of these, he would smoke until it was empty, then would break it in twain, throwing the fragments into another box prepared for their reception. He would then pull another pipe from its straw or wooden enclosure, fill it and destroy it as before, for he had a strong aversion to smoking a pipe a second time.

One of the most pleasant anecdotes of the late Prince Bismarck is told in connection with his love of smoke. Here is the story in his own words:

"The value of a good cigar is best understood when it is the last you possess, and there is no chance of getting another. At Konigsgratz I had only one cigar left in my pocket, which I carefully guarded throughout the battle as a miser guards his treasure. I did not feel justified in using it, then, for I painted in glowing colors in my mind the happy hour when I should enjoy it, after victory. But I had miscalculated my chances. A poor dragoon lay helpless, with both arms crushed, mourning for something to refresh him. I felt in my pockets and found that I had only gold, which would be of no use to him. But stay—I had still my cigar. I lighted it for him, and placed it between his teeth. . . . You should have seen the poor fellow's grateful smile. I never, never enjoyed a cigar so much as that one which I did not smoke."

The late Charles Sourcegne once created a considerable furor in the nonconformist dovecote by announcing during the course of a sermon that he intended smoking a cigar that night "to the glory of God." In an explanatory letter to a daily newspaper he pointed out that he had spoken the words with deliberation, and in all sincerity. "When," he wrote, "I heard good intense pain relieved, a weary brain soothed, and calm, refreshing sleep obtained by a cigar I have felt grateful to God and have blessed His name. This is what I meant, and by no means did I use the sacred words in any trifling spirit." Prof. Huxley, though once a hater of tobacco, became in later years an enthusiastic smoker. On one occasion he remarked, in the course of a lecture, that there was no more harm in a pipe than in a cup of tea. "You may poison yourself," he observed, "by drinking too much green tea, or kill your self by eating too many beefsteaks. For my part," concluded the professor, "I consider that tobacco, in moderation, is a sweetener and equalizer of the temper."

Absent mindedness has often gone hand in hand with smoking prohibitions, and we are told that Sir Isaac Newton, in a fit of mental abstraction, once used the finger of a lady he was courting as a tobacco stopper whilst he sat and smoked in silence beside her, thinking, of course, that his own finger was being employed for the purpose. On another occasion he continued to use various lights to his pipe wondering why no smoke resulted only to discover at length that for several hours the bowl had been empty.

Met With Hard Usage. A young man, employed in a northern mine, came into the city Thursday to spend Christmas with friends. He fell by the wayside by reason of partaking of too many reasonable greetings, and got into an altercation in a King street hotel. The result was that he was roughly used, being struck over the head and thrown across the east bound train and crossed over to Ogdenburg.
