Early Marriages Happiest.

The common experience is that the happiest marriages are those which take place early in life, and that when an elderly man or woman gets married —we are not speaking of widows and "For thee, 0 man, time is passed and eternity has come, prepare to die." widowers they more frequently make a mess of it. The reason for this is madness at the contemplation, for no sential to the happiness of wedded life able, too, for if one is accustomed to calamity alike in extent is found in that there should be common conceshandle money while young he will early like the records of theatres or public think alike; two people cannot all y learn its value. There are many things, as society is now organized, which mitigate against marriages except among the rich and the very poor. Among the very poorest classes of the population poverty is not considered a bar to marriage. But there is a great class in every community which is ambitious to "keep up appearances," and which young woman has been used to living with a certain amount of luxury, and
