Some one said in the council the other night in my hearing that it would take at least one hundred thousand dollars or more to properly equip the plant if the city should take it over now; can the city finance all this? I for one would like to see the King

But it will be said, if the by-law fails, the city will be out ten or twelve thousand dollars for expenses. Just so. but the city had better lose that amount than run the risk of being hopelessly involved in the possible expenditure of another hundred thousand or more. The Whig, in its editorial of the 7th inst, endeavored to that the plant was a paying concern from the evidence of the Toronto expert, Mr. Crossen, before the arbitratea pagoda on Lake Biwa, at Okitsu, panion. I am surprised that there not more said and written pro and con upon a matter of such long standing and importance. My opinion, and Margaret E, Sangster, in Harper's Weekpays me for it, is this: The whole scheme of municipal ownership of the light plant was ill-conceived and illstarred from the beginning, for the simple reason that the city can not

The plant is a first class investment if the proper capital can be secured for its rehabilitation and equipment. If the city can see its way to interest private capital to come to its aid to the tur of $100,000 then it should go ahead and take it over (if it takes the advice of its solicitor that there is no danger of further legal complications). Under present financial systems it takes money to make money, and the light plant is no exception.
