Do not play with poison!
It is an established fact that constipated people are far more likely to contract infectious disease—smallpox, typhus fever, scarlet fever, etc., than those who enjoy natural regularity.

YE OLDEN TYME
CHARACTERISTICS OF JUSTICE M'MAHON.

Courteous On The Bench And In Private Life—He Is Very Studious—How He Was Called.

She was a young lady, an impressive young lady, and when His Lordship Mr. Justice MacMahon took his place on the bench in the western court room Osgoode Hall, with a quiet dignity that only some of our judges possess, she whispered to her clerical escort, who was only half as interested in the case being heard as she was:

"Doesn't Judge MacMahon seem to have slipped out of an old family portrait, catalogued 'A gentleman of the eighteenth century'?"

The young lady's dilettante penchant for lawsuits and family portraits did not affect her feminine judgment.

One is not surprised when told that Judge MacMahon's ancestors held prominent positions in Ireland during the troublous times of the last of the Stuarts, that Colonel Art Oge MacMahon was James II.'s Lord Lieutenant of Monaghan and Hugh MacMahon was lieutenant-colonel of Gordon O'Neill's Irish Brigade that, to some extent, France, became renowned throughout Europe and redeemed the day at Fontenoy. The Celt is naturally a gentleman, and probably Mr. Justice MacMahon owes as much to his race as to his family. An Irish gentleman or a Highland gentleman means more than the phrase an English gentleman.

It possibly requires a woman or the keenness of feeling of a fellow-Celt to understand the distinction, that it exists. Beyond the fact that Hugh MacMahon was a Nisi Prius lawyer of repute, this to some extent explains his call to the Superior Court bench by his old-time political opponent, Sir John A. Macdonald. A Highlander, dominant as his nature may be, never rises feudally. His dominance is patriarchal, and the story goes that when Hugh MacMahon, tired possibly of the monotony of practice in a Provincial town, while his occasional opportunity, had left London and went to some extent obscured in the wild rush of Western settlement in the early days of the Winnipeg boom, the old-time Conservative chief asked a Western man:

"How about Hugh MacMahon?"
When the answer came, Sir John ejaculated, "Imagine Hugh MacMahon playing the game of life in a Western land boom! Ridiculous!"

he sat down in his generous petulance and immediately wired:

"Will you accept a Superior Court judgeship?"
And the Province of Ontario has a judge that not only brings to the Canadian bench an atmosphere of the courtliness of other days, but a sound lawyer and a man distinguished by humane opinions. An old-time courtliness, and a high sense of dignity are not inconsistent with modern conditions. When Mr. Justice MacMahon was conducting the trial of Birchall in the court room of Woodstock was crowded to suffocation, and the whole English-speaking world was to some extent interested in one of the most sensational murder trials in Canada's history, it was found that there was insufficient accommodation for the army of people that took intense human interest in the progress of the case. Judge MacMahon's suggestion was obtained, and telephone transmitters were so arranged that the testimony of witnesses, the addresses of counsel, and the charge of the judge to the jury could be heard in near-by rooms. There are very few judges who can retain their dignity and address a jury on a question of life and death over a telephone in close proximity to the witness on his desk, and there are still fewer who would be as considerate.

"No trial at any English assizes," said a representative Canadian journalist, "could have been conducted with a more admirable temper than that at Woodstock."
Judge MacMahon was born at Guelph, Ont., March 5, 1859, Critic of our Public school system, might possibly find in Judge MacMahon an artist in tastes and literary and educational tastes an example of what the education of the schools can never give, but whether it is due to the natural disposition of young MacMahon or the careful tutelage of a scholarly father, the result has been that Judge MacMahon is not only one of the broadest and most read members of the Canadian bench, but also one of the keenest, if kindliest, of art critics. After a short service on an engineering survey of the proposed Ottawa Ship Canal and the Chats Rapids, he entered upon the study of the law, in 1884. For five years he successfully practiced in Brantford, when he removed to London, Ont., and built up the largest practice in Western Ontario. In 1876 he was made a Q. C. by the Ontario Government, and in 1885 by the Dominion. In 1877 he represented the Dominion Government in the arbitration of a boundary question, and, with D'Alton McCarthy and Christopher Robinson, was counsel for the Dominion when the matter came before the Privy Council in England. As counsel for a late Ontario Premier he was known as the Biddulph tragedist. He had an opportunity of showing his high gifts as a Nisi Prius and criminal lawyer, and secured an acquittal of his client in what was known as the Biddulph tragedy. Liberal, Judge MacMahon was a strong bitter partisan, and unsuccessfully contested London and Kent in his party's interest.

It may be that Judge MacMahon will not be remembered as a judge who derived keen intellectual enjoyment from hair-splitting rulings on points of abstract law. It may be that he will be remembered not so much from the fact that his judgments are seldom set aside, and that lawyers and litigants never cavil and object to their cases being set down to be heard by him. But there is no doubt, says The Toronto Star, Hugh MacMahon will long be remembered as the judge of the Superior Court of Ontario with sound common sense and a kindly, gentle heart, a gentleman all of ye olden tyme.

PASSING OF THE HEARTH.
A Tribute to the Old Time Fireplace of Pleasant Ontario.
Many a pioneer who is passing the evening of his life in this part of Ontario, once a country of great maples, elms and beech and giant pines, feels something like an elderly woman in our great Northwest—who was a young wife in the young West when she pays a hearty tribute to the hearth as she knits her sixty years ago.

The coming of the cooking stove marked the beginning of a new epoch in the lives of our grandmothers. Oh! to excel to this survivor, the good cheer the fireplace brought to the children! No corn was quite so good as the ears roasted before the fire. No potatoes so good as those roasted in the winter.

No apples equal to frozen apples, boiled; then we would melt maple sugar and sugar of again on the snow. And she says in conclusion: "With the passing of the fireplace has passed the word 'fireside' and the word 'hearth.' It was around the fireside we gathered for family prayer, around the fireside we gathered to read, to visit, to gaze with the fireside and the hearth are most of my dear ones, with whom I knit every day."

There were no coal, wood or gas ranges in those days, but there was a fireplace, with a wide, deep hearth—and a chimney that would draw built large enough for the sweep to pass through.

The put fireplace would take a log four or five feet long and a foot and a half through. This was piled on andirons and as there were no matches in those days one of the greatest anxieties of the careful housewife was to prevent the fire from going out. If it did go out she had to go to one of the neighbors, perhaps a quarter of a mile away, for a shovel-ful of live coals.

One of the signs of neatness in a housekeeper in those days was the way she kept the hearth cleaned, using the broom and wing, and a few of her many duties were to dip candles to prevent the fire from going out. If it did go out she had to go to one of the neighbors, perhaps a quarter of a mile away, for a shovel-ful of live coals.

Well Agan.
The many friends of John Blount will be pleased to learn that he has entirely recovered from his attack of rheumatism. Chamberlain's Pain-Expeller cured him after the best doctors in the town (Monro, Ind.) had failed to give relief. The prompt relief from pain which this liniment affords is alone worth many times its cost. Sold by all druggists.

Dennis Gallagher, an old citizen of Brockville, who suffered much from a severe attack of hiccoughs, is getting around again slowly.

Kidney Disease
Results From Colds

Exposure of the Back to Drafts Not an Inrequent Cause of This Dreadfully Painful Ailment.

The kidneys are very susceptible to cold, so much so that a current of cold air on the back is sufficient to cause congestion of these organs. It is also a very common thing for heavy colds to settle on the kidneys and give rise to the most complicated diseases.

While teamsters, railroadmen and others whose work subjects them to more than ordinary exposure are especially liable to be overtaken by kidney disease, it is also frequent among indoor workers.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are so wonderfully prompt in their action on the kidneys that they are especially valuable in cases of kidney disease which arise from colds.

Backache, highly colored urine, pain or smarting when passing water, head-ache, cramps in the legs, constipation alternating with looseness of the bowels, sickle anorexia, vomiting and general feelings of discomfort are among the most common symptoms. The record of cures effected by means of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills has not been equalled in the history of medicine. In the majority of the homes of Canada these pills are always at hand as an indispensable family medicine.

MILLINERY DISPLAYS.
Napanee Merchants Made Admirable Exhibit.
Napanee, March 29.—The millinery openings on Saturday evening drew large crowds of ladies, and the shops presented a busy appearance, although not much business was done. The main desire of the merchants is to display their wares, and this was done in such an admirable manner that words of praise were heard from everyone who had the pleasure of a walk through any of the millinery parlors.
