DEATH WITHOUT GLOOM.

Meet Universal and Inevitable With Resignation.

Goldwin Smith, in the North American Review, writes: "It is useless to argue against the sadness of mortality. No one can think without emotion of ceasing to be. No one can think without emotion of an eternal parting from the objects of our affection. Mazzini is described in his last hours as moaning over the sentence of his physician who had told him that his departure was at hand. But the things at the thought of leaving which Mazzini was agonized were only a palace, a glorious gallery of pictures, and an immense fortune. He was notably not leaving a soul whom he had loved."

"By the miserable and the very sorry death will not seldom be welcomed as eternal sleep. By all it must be met with resignation. What is universal and inevitable can hardly be an evil. Let us have no ghastly death's-head and cross bones. Our frames will mingle again with the general life of the universe; and the more quickly they are allowed to do this, the less repulsive the thought of death will be. Nothing, surely, can be more sensible or odious than our fashion of protracting decay. The Egyptian practice of embalmment, which sought to avert decay altogether, was comparatively sensible, and certainly less revolting. It is to be hoped also that there will some day be an end of the undertaker with his hideous pomp of death struggling with the life and traffic of the crowded street, as well as of that sort of social suicide which survivors at present think themselves bound to perform under the guise of mourning; as if the dead could be benefitted or pleased by casting gloom over the life of the survivors.

"All this is said on the hypothesis that scientific scepticism succeeds in demolishing the hope of a future life. After all, great is our ignorance, and there may be something yet behind the veil."

But it is DANGEROUS. Sick Kidneys make mind and body sick. GIN PILLS cure sick kidneys. They do that one thing—do it every time. They make the kidneys well—and keep them well. If there is anything wrong with the kidneys, GIN PILLS never fail to relieve the pain and cure the trouble. We have such faith in GIN PILLS that we authorize our druggist to refund the money if they fail to cure. 50c box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at your druggist's or direct from THE SOLE DRUG CO., WINNIPEG, MAN.

GENERAL BOOTH

INTERVIEWED ON THE ANNIVERSARY OF HIS BIRTH.

The Grand Old Man Of The Salvation Army Gives Some Account Of His Work Which Is Not Yet Finished.

General Booth was seventy-five on April 10th. Three-quarters of a century have rolled over the head of this man, leaving him still alert and active in command of the wonderful organization he called into being nearly forty years ago. In fifty different countries and thirty-one different languages the Salvation Army is carrying on its work to-day, and the old chief, though heavy with years, his tall, stalwart figure, at last beginning to bend beneath the weight of them, is yet able to direct the army's operations in the furthest parts of the earth.

This is an army with 14,000 officers, under the personal command of one general. That general knows them all. It is his proud boast that he has visited his outposts in every country with the exception of Japan, the West Indies, Java and South America. Up early and to bed late, with hard and weary journeys in between, has been the general's daily round during his seventy-fifth year, which has just closed. Within recent months, apart from all he has done at his headquarters at Queen Victoria street, General Booth has been preaching and organizing in America, France, Germany, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Belgium, Scotland and Ireland.

This very night he ships for the continent again, on a three-weeks' preaching tour throughout Germany and Scandinavia. Within a fortnight of his return, he is booked to visit the army stations in Switzerland. He must then hurry back to London, to take part in the great international gathering in London this summer.

These details (writes a member of The London Daily News staff) are what I learnt from the general himself by dint of much questioning. So busy a man is hard to catch with a few minutes to spare for a chat about himself. First he thought I might be able to see him for a brief space on Sunday afternoon. Afterwards he had to alter the appointment by telegram, announcing that the only half hour he could spare would be on Saturday night at his home at Hadley Wood.

Like An Old Warrior. Facing up and down his room while he talks, with his grey hair and beard, his strong face, his iron will, General Booth, at seventy-five remains one of nothing so much as an old warrior. A certain brusqueness, almost harshness, about his manner suggests the old soldier more than ever. But this impression fades when he becomes earnest in spiritual things or refers to the needy and suffering. Then he is more like a prophet than a soldier.

"What do I regard as the chief work of my life?" he repeated after me. "Preaching. Advancing years make no difference to me as a preacher. I forget everything when I get on my feet. Voice, energy, mental power, and I hope spiritual inspiration, are all more vivid and vigorous than at any previous period of my life. I am glad to say I have more success in leading people to a new life than I ever had."

"So it would seem from some of the stories the general tells—stories that have the true Salvation Army ring about them. I hear how at Glasgow recently a well-to-do youth, the descendent of a well-to-do family, an audience of 3,500 people to enlist in the army's service; how in America a woman, who had begged her fare from a publican, travelled 500 miles to hear the general preach in Kansas City, "going back converted to convert the man who had lent her the money." When last in Winnipeg the general heard of a "notorious backslider up country," as he was described, who was going about saying if he could only hear General Booth preach, he believed he would be reclaimed. The man sold his horse to travel 600 miles to attend one of the services. "He was the first at the penitent form, and though he went home minus a horse his heart was full of love and peace."

And so on through many other similar cases, including that of a man in a north of England town who boasted that he had hardly been sober for twenty years, until General Booth came to town. I checked the flow of these miraculous narratives that sounded so much like passages from the New Testament by asking the worn old leader about other phases of his work.

"You are an organizer and a writer as well as a preacher. How do you find time for it all especially at seventy-five?" "I divide my work into three principal parts," came the ready answer. "First and foremost I place preaching. Then I have the business side of the army to attend to. There are 14,000 officers to direct in the four quarters of the globe. There is our great social scheme, with its emigration agency, now subsidized by the Canadian government. We have also a large and rapidly growing trade in various things, as well as insurance, banking and legal business. All these matters call for a considerable amount of time and thought and care. Thirdly, I have my literary work. I am compelled to write a great deal for our different publications. We have sixty-three of them, with a combined circulation of over a million copies a week. The War Cry alone is published in seventeen different languages. Preaching is not merely General joy in life. "I began exactly sixty years ago," he told me. "I was fifteen at the time. I made a beginning at an open air meeting in my native Nottingham. How well I remember giving out that old Methodist hymn: "O for a thousand tongues to sing My best Redeemer's praise. And the old man's face became radiant as he repeated Charles Wesley's words and recalled his first boyish fervor."

"The Salvation Army had its rise in open-air meetings," he went on. "It is now some twenty-eight years since I, then a Methodist minister in the east end, commenced the series of open-air meetings on Mile-end Waste which laid the foundation of the Salvation Army. Our movement was begun among the poor for the poor, and we have been preaching to the poor ever since."

For a moment or two the grey-haired veteran walked the room without speaking, neither his secretary nor myself breaking his silence. Then as though speaking to himself, he said in an undertone: "For sixty years I've been preaching, chiefly to the poor. For the poor I have nothing but pity and compassion. "Are you satisfied with your life's work?" I interposed. "No," he said sharply. "Satisfied? Who could be satisfied? Who could be satisfied amid the indifference and disbelief of today. Look at the multitude around us who care nothing for God. Look at the growing agnosticism of the people. Look at the wretchedness and sufferings of the poor. Look at our national sins. Never was selfishness so marked as a national vice as it is to-day. Our thoughts are centered on spreading our trade and our flag regardless of principle. We are filled with a desire to expand, forgetting the lesson of the frog in the fable. In all the discussions about Chinese labour, and in three months' time I was a cured and sound man. I speak this from the bottom of my heart and cannot say too much in its praise, as it is undoubtedly wonderful. I give this testimonial thinking it will serve some other sufferer as it did myself, and would be pleased to give any further information to any person applying for it."

I can show you many testimonials from people whom my Belt has cured. Yes, and in cases where doctors had to give up. I can do the same for you. All I ask is a chance. Let the man come to my office who says he has Rheumatism; show me the man who has a Weak Back. I will relieve him in a very few minutes with the electricity furnished by my belt. Tragedy Of Prehistoric Times. London Times. There is a story of horror and tragedy in a discovery made by Merthyrville of the prehistoric period. It is the find in a high one, a tumulus amid the sand dunes, two skeletons in excellent preservation, have been discovered by W. Riley at Brideford. The skeletons were those of a man and a woman. The jawbone of the latter was broken, apparently, not after, but just before death, while the skeleton of the man was in a peculiar position, and covered with stones. From these circumstances the theory is put forward by Mr. Ryley that the woman was murdered and the man placed alive in the grave and doomed to death, presumably for murdering her.

Marriage In Greece. In Kaso, one of the most southern islands of Greece, the parents upon both sides take upon themselves all the responsibilities of courtship and marriage. Courtship, as we understand it, is not in any way permitted to the betrothed couple. No moonlight walks or tete-a-tetes are allowed. Such a course would be deemed highly reprehensible, and all wooing, if there is any, must take place in the presence of the elders. But there is no great time for romancing at these ceremonies of custom, for the marriage follows the offer as quickly as may be.

A Seasoned Rustic. Harner's Weekly. The younger daughter of a prominent New York financier, who had passed most of her years either in the city or at the large summer resorts, recently paid her first visit to a real country home. She was anything but ignorant of rural conditions, and when a dish of honey was set before her on the breakfast table she saw her opportunity.

"Ah," she observed, carelessly. "I see you keep a bee."

Read What Andrew Vandewater Has to Say:

For two years I have been a great sufferer from Sciatica and pain under my heart; I also had very severe nervous spells. I tried all the leading physicians in Picton and Belleville, and they did me no good. One told me I was getting creeping paralysis, and the other one said I had enlargement of the heart. I was persuaded to try one of Mr. Langley's Electric Belts, and in a short time felt much better, and in three months' time I was a cured and sound man. I speak this from the bottom of my heart and cannot say too much in its praise, as it is undoubtedly wonderful. I give this testimonial thinking it will serve some other sufferer as it did myself, and would be pleased to give any further information to any person applying for it.

THE DAY OF REST.

How Puritan The Belief In The Sabbath Is. Goldwin Smith. The Day of Rest is inestimable. All the more so since our everyday life has become such a whirl of toil and excitement. Our sympathy must be with those who desire to guard it against the apprehended encroachments of an intensely commercial world. But they must remember that the state in Canada, happily for both church and state, is unsectarian, and leaves all citizens perfectly free to take their own course in matters of religion. Those who do not believe in the Sabbath cannot be compelled by law to keep the day like those who do. They can only be compelled in the interest of society at large to respect the Day of Rest. Nor can any man be compelled by law to spend the day in religious exercises, or, if he does not, to spend it in listlessness and gloom. It is perhaps not generally known how peculiarly Puritan the belief in the "Sabbath" is. The reign of Edward VI in England was a period of strong Protestant ascendancy in regulations relating to the church. Yet a statute of that reign, 5th and 6th of Edward VI, chapter 31, respecting the observance of holidays, uses the name "Sunday," not "Sabbath," and proceeds to enact, "That it shall be lawful to every husbandman, laborer, fisherman, and to all and every other person or persons of what estate, degree, or condition he or they be upon the holy days aforesaid, in harvest, or at any other time in the year when necessity shall require, to labor, ride, fish or work any kind of work, at their free will and pleasure; anything in this act to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding." It does not seem that in Canada at present Sunday is ill-kept or that there is any interference with its religious observance by those who are minded so to observe it. We present a happy contrast to New York or Chicago.

The Departed. Park Benjamin. The good, the brave, the beautiful. How dreamless is their sleep. Where rolls the dirge-like music Of the everlasting deep? Or where the surging night winds Pale winter's robes have spread Above the narrow palaces In the cities of the dead! I look around and feel the awe Of one who walks alone Among the wrecks of former days, In mournful ruin strewn; I start to hear the ringing sounds Among the cypress trees For the voice of the departed Is borne upon the breeze.
