Despite reassuring contradictions, there is a general disposition to regard the report, as having a certain basis of fact. The hope is expressed by service of M.P's and by representative members of the volunteer force that the statement is at least exaggerated, but the fear is widely held that Mr. Arnold-Foster and his advisers contemplate a wholesale suppression of volunteers, militia and yeomanry, preparatory to the intro-duction of a modified scheme of compulsory service.

In their criticisms of the trend policy at the war office they urge special objection to retention of the auxiliary forces under the adjutantgeulal's control.

They state that the new department of the director general of auxiliary forces is nothing more than a branch of the war office for the performance of clerical labor, and that under its $29.35 (Good for 30 days) constitution the auxiliary forces are likely to fail in the eyes of the nation for want of adequate departmental organization.

The members hold that the future of the auxiliaries hangs upon the creation of a separate administrative office. Without this independent organization, they say, the forces

Sir C. Howard Vincent, M.P., who was for many years colonel of the Queen's Westminsters, champions the cause of the volunteers in vigorous fashion. In an interview to-day he

"Four years have clapsed since the auxiliary forces saved the nation in South Africa. Instead of things being better for them, they have become worse. The government led us to believe that the auxiliary forces were at last to have sympathetic treatment and proper organization. Mr. Arnold-Forster himseld said Liverpool that it was impossible think that we could not get enormous value out of the 250,000 young men

"The war office also stated that pending the report of the royal commission on the militia and volunteers. the branch of the inspector general of auxiliary forces was to be considered a detached department, reporting di rect to the army council. This has all been upset, and the department, representing 350,000 men, is now absorbed by the adjutant general, and forms one of the twenty-eight branch es dealing with 200 other subjects. "For forty years concessions to the volunteers have only been wrung the point of the bayonet; adjutant | mach generals have regarded the auxiliaries through regulars' eyes. What want is proper organization under officers who understand the conditions
