A CLEAN UP OF TAXES In Detroit, of the taxes of 1902, and mounting to five million dollars, there are only $4,000 uncollected. "Now the private business that could show as clean a collection of its bills receivable," says the Detroit Evening News, "would feel so swelled up with natisfaction that it would give a banquet to its employees and patrons and ould well afford to do it." Of course the city's business is one upon credit and individual solute, close collection involves incessant drumming and a great deal tact, for it has long been the fashion in Detroit to let taxes drag for fear of giving offence that would affect the political strength of the treasurer.

The lesson learned by the new collector of Detroit is that which collectors at London and Ottawa have laid so well to heart. It is that there wholly done.
