that he had fired a revolver in front of Babcock's house on the night in question, but he maintained that had no desire to injure Babcock, and was merely shooting the revolver in the air to frighten him, as Babcock had struck and knocked him (the witness) down a few moments before. He had been carrying the revolver in the afternoon, as he had intended going on a fishing trip, and did not go home on purpose to get his revolv er to shoot Babcock, as the latter claimed. The witness also stated that he had been drinking and was slightly intoxicated. This is Brown's first appearance in police court circles, and he has hitherto led a fairly quiet life. Judge Price was willing to take a lenient view of the case. He decided that Brown was guilty of carrying and discharging firearms, and imposed a fine of $25, which Mrs. Sager, Brown's housekeeper, immediately produced. and Brown was set at liberty, receiving some very good advice from the judge.
