Parry Sound, Ont., Jan. 5 .- After being for eight days imprisoned in the ighthouse on Red Rock, of which he is light keeper, Adam Brown has suceeded in leaving the rock, and with much difficulty reaching the shore in safety. When Mr. Brown received his instructions to keep the light burning until December 15th, it was too late for him to lay in an extra store of provisions and he had all his preparations made to leave the rock. The sud den cold weather that set in a few days before the 15th, caused sufficient ice to form to prevent the tug that as sent to bring him off, reaching him, and the ice was continually shift safe to venture on. After eight days of weary watching for help, and living or one meal a day, Mr. Brown succeeded in launching his boat in the water, the ice having shifted from that neighborhood, and he started in the direction of the search party which was looking for him, he having seen their fire the night previous. But owing to the ice along the shore between the islands he was mable to get within a mile of them and was unable to attract their attention. He then struck out for the main land, and after a row of about twenty miles and pulling and shoving his boat over ice fields, he made it, and spent that night in a fisherman's cottage. Next day he walked to town, Red Rock light being situated at the open water where it gets full sweep of the wind and waves is at any time of the year a difficult place to leave, but at this. hick and the rock itself being in a like manner it is a difficult feat to launch a boat and get into it, and Mr. Brown is thankful that he is alive
