According to Tien-Tsin des-Twenty-fifth anniversary of Brock patches the Russians had considerable success in looting during the raid. They captured a provision train at Kaipantze, which they swept clean, and they also seized provisions in stores on the outskirts of Yinkow. A despatch to the Times, from Tokio, says that Gen. Nogi and his staff controvert the story that

Russians dishonorably destroyed their ships and munitions after offering to capitulate. They say that inasmuch as there was no truce pending the negotiations, Gen. Stoessel. was perfectly justified in using his own judgment. The conduct of the Russians was strictly punctilious from the moment of the signature of the terms. It has Leen ascertained that there were only seventy-six Japanese prisoners in Port Arthur including those wounded. This has caused deep emotion in Japan as it is believed that many hundreds of wounded who fell within the Russian lines were left to perish.

Gen. Nogi having received many congratulations from persons in England upon his victory asked the Standard's correspondents, at Port Arthur, to telegraph the following to the friends of Japan in England: "After pending so many months and sacrifi eing so many lives in taking Port Ar thur, I feel unworthy of praise, knowing the sympathy of the people of England not only my soldiers but I heartily rejoice.
