PROF. CAPPON

THE TORONTO GLOBE SETS HIM RIGHT.

His Independent Stand Is Praised By His Deductions Taken Entirely From Tory Sources.

Toronto Globe, Jan. 14th.

The charge is sometimes made that university men do not take that part in public and political affairs for which their abilities and training might be supposed especially to qualify them. It is said that a university training should be a guarantee of breadth and culture such as would overcome bias and prejudice and insure independent thought and impartial judgment. If it were so, then a university degree would be the supreme desideratum in Canadian politics to-day. But something more is needed. Even in men who may have no axe to grind, and whose sincerest desire is to improve the political situation, there is a traditional bias or personal prejudice which, if not recognized and not allowed for, may account and defeat their best endeavors.

A case in point is provided by Prof. James Cappon of Queen's University, who presents himself as an independent and pleads for higher standards of political morality. Throughout six pages of the current issue of Queen's Quarterly he discusses the question of political corruption and cites instances from recent political history. But in every case his illustration is drawn from among offences charged against liberals. Beginning with West Elgin, he follows the lines common in Tory campaign literature and in the Opposition newspapers down to West Hastings and Frontenac. Never once does he mention Conservative offences or offenders, and by more than a half-dozen misstatements of fact he betrays the sources of his information. For instance, when he says

"Our only hope of escaping from the clutch of the machine lies in the growth of a strong and independent public spirit. But we shall never develop that if we are to allow all other considerations to be lost in the spirit of the partisan, that spirit which spoke so loudly in the declaration made by the editor of The Globe at the recent convention, that he was 'prepared to look the ugliest page of the Liberal record in the face and to do all he could to return Mr. Ross with a larger majority than money could buy.' That may be all very well for Mr. Macdonald. The editor of the chief party organ may easily persuade himself that it is the right thing to do in the circumstances. But the principle it implies of condoning the crimes committed by the party in office on the mere hypothesis that the other party would be as bad, or worse, if it came into power, is hardly a safe or a proper one for the country to adopt."

We challenge Prof. Cappon to make good either the statements which he presents or the inferences which he draws. The quotation upon which he bases his charge is

GROWING UP

There's something the matter with the child that fails to grow up. A child that grows up too much, however, without proper filling out of flesh, is almost as badly off. Nothing will help these pale, thin "weedy" children like Scott's Emulsion. It supplies the rounding out of flesh and the rich inward nourishment of blood and vital organs which insures rapid growth a healthy and uniform development.

"Attorney-General Gibson was at the Sault the night before the election" he not only reveals his own ignorance of the Sault case, but also makes it plain that he depended on The Toronto News for his "facts" as well as for his impressions. Mr. Gibson was not within four hundred miles of the Sault "the night before the election."

We venture to make an extract from Prof. Cappon's article which in its spirit and point of view is characteristic:

"Our only hope of escaping from the clutch of the machine lies in the growth of a strong and independent public spirit. But we shall never develop that if we are to allow all other considerations to be lost in the spirit of the partisan, that spirit which spoke so loudly in the declaration made by the editor of The Globe at the recent convention, that he was 'prepared to look the ugliest page of the Liberal record in the face and to do all he could to return Mr. Ross with a larger majority than money could buy.' That may be all very well for Mr. Macdonald. The editor of the chief party organ may easily persuade himself that it is the right thing to do in the circumstances. But the principle it implies of condoning the crimes committed by the party in office on the mere hypothesis that the other party would be as bad, or worse, if it came into power, is hardly a safe or a proper one for the country to adopt."

We challenge Prof. Cappon to make good either the statements which he presents or the inferences which he draws. The quotation upon which he bases his charge is a garbled fragment from a Tory newspaper, and is absolutely false to the spirit and the letter of the "declaration" to which he refers. The address in question had the defects of an impromptu speech, but in the minds of the four thousand men who heard it there was no uncertainty as to its meaning. The following sentences from the published report give flat denial to Prof. Cappon's insinuations:

"There is no hope for the Liberal party, and there ought to be none, unless it is prepared to face any defect in its own ranks, any imperfection in its own methods, and to remove it. If you are Liberals you are not afraid to face the ugliest facts, and not only repudiate and renounce them, but those responsible for them. It is because I have confidence in Mr. Ross, in his integrity, in his ability, and in his devotion to the public interest, that I am prepared to look with you at the worst facts in the Liberal record, to condemn them, and yet to say that I am prepared to do my part to give him the majority he ought to have for five years before he closes his political career. And we, if we are Liberals, shall not slit our eyes to anything that may be weakening the stamina of our own party. We shall go back with this resolutely before us, that the coming election shall be free from anything that might disgrace any part of our Liberal history. And if we do that we shall return from the Province with a larger majority than money can buy."

That extract is from the verbatim report published in The Globe at the time. It was available for Prof. Cappon. He professes to know The Globe. Yet he goes to Opposition sources, Tory and "Independent," for data upon which to base his charge of condoning the crimes committed by the party in office. Were the editor of The Globe to misquote and misconstruct and malign his conduct, would he be described by Prof. Cappon as "partiality" or "malevolence." Is the ethical quality of the act changed by a change of actors? And does Prof. Cappon regard the good name of a newspaper as a thing of no importance, and a reputation for intelligence and integrity as of less value to an editor than to a university professor? The aberrations of Mr. Hossack need not be taken seriously, but Prof. Cappon is a gentleman of culture and responsibility, not a notoriety-seeker, and he ought not to allow his original high Tory prejudices to blind him to the actual facts of the whole situation. In any case, even if he deceives himself, he ought not to suppose that his "independence" deceives others.

Well Known Labor Leader in Hamilton Says the Liberal Government Should be Supported by People of Ontario

Samuel Landers, the well-known labor leader of Hamilton, who, during his twenty years' residence in Hamilton, has been strictly independent in politics, has decided to support the liberal government in the coming provincial elections. To the Times Mr. Landers stated: "While I have been strictly independent in politics, and have from time to time supported candidates of both parties, I cannot deny the fact that the present Ontario government has done much for the working classes of the province. Ontario has the most advanced labor laws of any province, or state on this continent; yes, and equal to those of any country in the world. Its master and servant act, compensation for workmen's injuries, factories and numerous other acts in the interests of the masses, should merit a goodly support from among the working class, the organized faction thereof, especially. I think I would be an ingrate to support the present provincial government," said Mr. Landers, "after all it has done for us. Being a member of the deputation before the premier who asked for an amendment of the shops act, to prohibit barber shops from working on Sunday, we had but to wait for the next sitting, when our wish was granted. Again, when organized labor asked for additional factory inspectors, an additional male and female inspectors for each were appointed immediately when as vice-president of Ontario of the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada, with others we approached Premier Ross and asked that all the brooms made at the Central Prison be labelled 'prison-made' and after Walter Rolfe of this city, president of the Hamilton Trades and Labor Council, and second vice-president of the International Broom Makers' Union, described the injustice to free broom makers, Mr. Ross replied: 'To do that know that there was such competition by the prison-made brooms against free labor, and they shall certainly be labelled, and something further done, if possible.' Within one month the government announced that the contract for broom-making in the Central Prison would be abolished, and after his orders, work up his stock, and after that broom-making in the Central Prison would be abolished. And what in more, the provincial secretary has already announced the sale of the broom-making machinery plant. In view of these and many other friendly actions of the government towards labor, there is nothing left for labor to do but to support a government which stands for its interest." Mr. Landers says he has decided to do what he can, to insure the government's return, and work as well as talk.

THE BATTERY OFFICERS.

Connected With Nava Shooting Episode, Commit Suicide.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 21.—The entry into the circus arena attending a discharge of case shot from one of the guns of a saluting battery, on Thursday, on the occasion of the blessing of the waters of the Neva, resulted in the arrest of Capt. Davey, of the artillery. The officer immediately committed suicide with a revolver. His lieutenant committed suicide afterwards.

It is believed that the other officers of the battery have also killed themselves. The reason given for this is the ineffaceable stain upon the record of the battery. The officers of the battery were above suspicion. Two of the gunners, however, were suspected of being connected with the revolutionary movement. The investigation has revealed that another gunner, shell containing 128 bullets, was embedded in a timber barrier which was frozen in the ice on a line between the battery and the pavilion chapel.

SIXTEEN-YEAR-OLD GIRL.

Commits Suicide By Drowning—A Sad Case.

Montreal, Jan. 21.—Philomena Massey, a sixteen-year-old girl, residing with her parents at Turcotte village, a south-western suburb of the city, committed suicide by drowning herself, yesterday, through a hole in the ice in the Lachine canal, close to which the village is situated. The girl is stated to have been wayward and incorrigible, and was frequently upbraided by her parents for her bad conduct.

Yesterday, while an incident of that kind was in progress, the girl declared that she was tired of existence and intended to destroy herself. She forthwith made off in the direction of the canal, pursued by her mother and sister, and succeeded in carrying out her intention.
