The mission of the Catholic church has been most educative in its character, and its effects are clearly an evidence of what can be done when its leaders seriously combat the habits that tend to the enslavement of men. What the Catholic church has done should be undertaken by all the churches and the fact that there is much listlessness in religious circles not much to their credit.

Little namby pamby talks, spiced with poetic screeds and pathetic stories, will not shake men out of evil courses. There has to be the heart to heart inquiry, such as the Paulist fathers conducted, and when it is had there will be some the revival for which some people have looked so long in vain. It is to the credit of the Catholic church clergy that they have interested themselves in personal investigations into local conditions, and that they were quite clear as to the needs of the hour ere they began the campaign which is bearing precious fruits. The recommendation, that drunkards be spanked, is a silly one, and reflection upon the grand jury which gave it expression. Drunkards are not eformed by experiences that do not ceal to their better nature. The unfortunate lapses, and the paddle
