BABY TUCKER'S WONDERFUL CURE

Covered from Head to Foot with Humours—Forty Boils on Head at One Time—Could Not Shut Eyes to Sleep—Doctors Did No Good.

CURED BY CUTICURA IN ONE MONTH

Mrs. George H. Tucker, Jr., 335 Greenfield Avenue, Milwaukee, Wis., is a grateful mother. "When six months old," she says, "my little girl weighed a pound and a half less than at birth. When one month old a scab formed on her face, spreading until it completely covered her from head to foot, followed by boils, having forty on her head at one time, and more on her body. Then her skin started to dry up, and it became so bad she could not shut her eyes to sleep. One month's treatment with Cuticura Soap and Ointment made a complete cure, and now my child is as large, strong, and healthy as any child of her age. The doctor's drug bills amounted to a large sum, and my baby grew worse all the time. Then we got Cuticura Soap and Ointment and cured her at trifling expense."

CUTICURA A BLESSING To Skin-Tortured Babies.

The suffering which Cuticura Soap and Ointment have alleviated among the young, and the comfort they have afforded worn-out and worried parents, have led to their adoption in countless homes as priceless remedies for birth humours, and every form of itching, scaly, pimply skin, and scalp humours, with loss of hair, of infancy and childhood. A warm bath with Cuticura Soap, and a single anointing with Cuticura Ointment, will permit of sleep for baby, and rest for mother, and point to a speedy and permanent cure in the most distressing cases.

GREAT RIVALS OF THE SEA

Throughout the entire civilized world at this period all eyes are turned to Vice-Admiral Togo, of the Japanese navy, and Rear-Admiral Rojestvensky, of the Russian navy, who, strange to relate, are so close to the same age that but one year intervenes. Vice-Admiral Togo, whose warships annihilated the Russian Port Arthur fleet, who is now face to face with Rojestvensky is a small stocky man, but wiry and tireless. He is fifty-five years old, and, like Oyama, and Nogi, is of unattractive, commonplace appearance. He is not princely or noble birth, but is a simple gentleman, a samurai of the Keicho class, as so many of his fellow officers are. His senior in rank, Admiral Copet Ito (not to be confused with his namesake, Marquis Ito), who was in chief command of the navy during the China-Japanese war, is now chief of the naval headquarters staff in Tokio, is also a Satsuma Samurai and formerly the whole Japanese fleet was officered and manned by the Satsumas, in the same way that the Japanese army is drawn from the Choshu clan.

Admiral Togo received a great part of his education at the British Naval College, Greenwich, where he went through the regular courses of instruction some thirty years ago. He thus understood a good deal of the history, training and traditions of the British navy and he has brought the knowledge thus acquired to bear on his own with excellent effect. Returning to Japan, he was employed in various capacities. In 1894, when war broke out between China and Japan, he was in command of the Naniwa, a cruiser of 3,650 tons, one of the vessels composing what was then known as the first flying squadron of the Japanese navy. During the war he greatly distinguished himself and earned the reputation of being a first-class fighting man.

It was in connection with the episode of the sinking of the Kowshing that his name first came into world-wide prominence. At the time some adverse criticisms of his action on the occasion were heard, but these died away on a fuller knowledge of the circumstances. The story reveals something of the character of the man.

It was in the year 1894. Though there had been no actual declaration of war, it was evident enough that Japan and China were about to fight over Korea. Warships had been assembled and large bodies of troops were either on the field, or were on the way to the scene of conflict. The Kowshing, a transport vessel, flying the British flag, with a British captain and crew, carrying some 1,100 Chinese soldiers for Asan, was met by Togo in the Naniwa, who signalled to her by firing two blank cartridges to stop, which she did. Thereafter a Japanese lieutenant went on board the Kowshing with a peremptory order from Togo that the transport must proceed no farther toward her destination, but at once accompany the Naniwa to the main Japanese fleet, Capt. Galsworthy, of the Kowshing was willing to obey these orders, but not so minded were the officers of the Chinese force on board the vessel; they immediately raised a great clamor and threatened Galsworthy.

Seeing what was occurring, Togo sent a boat to bring off Capt. Galsworthy and his crew, but meanwhile the disturbance and confusion on the Kowshing had increased, and the Chinese prevented them from leaving her. Some time then passed, and at length Togo signalled Galsworthy to take one of his two boats and come over to the Naniwa, but the British captain was not allowed by the Chinese to do so. For four hours Togo stood off in trying to save him and the ship, but finding there was no chance of this, he at last ordered the red flag, which announced that he was about to fire, to be hoisted. A few moments later a well-directed shot from the Naniwa struck the engine room and penetrated the hull of the Kowshing, which soon afterwards filled and sank. As Galsworthy and his men leaped over the bulwarks of the transport into the sea they were fired on by the Chinese. Togo at once sent out a boat and rescued as many as he could.

In this way Togo began the China-Japanese war. His countrymen have never forgotten the part he played in this episode. "Togo!" they say, "it was Togo who sank the Kowshing." And they draw a confident augury from it.

Has Much Experience.

In the course of the war Togo saw a great deal of actual fighting, so he is a naval man of no little experience. He was present at the first battle of Phungdo, at the battle of Halyang, took part in the bombardment of Tangchow and saw the final overthrow and destruction of Wei-Hai-Wei, of all that was left of the Chinese fleet. Nor did his ship, the Naniwa, pass entirely scatheless through these ordeals, though she received no vital damage. But ever the fame of Togo, Heihachiro, grew; he was known as a man of resolution and resource, most of all as a hard and determined fighter.

After the war he was raised to the rank of rear-admiral and promoted to third command of the Japanese fleet. When the elder statesman, that powerful coteries of five men who are the emperor's chief advisers in national crises, were mapping out eighteen months ago their plan of campaign for the impending war with Russia, the question came up as to who should command the fleet that would be sent to reduce Port Arthur.

"Send Togo," Marquis Ito is reported to have said. "He struck first at the Yalu. He will strike first at Port Arthur."

Initiative is one of Vice-Admiral Togo's preeminent traits. The nation's heads know so well that Togo never lets "the grass grow under his feet" that when they received the news of his daring attack on Port Arthur they were not overwhelmingly surprised. "They expected it," said a Japanese naval officer on duty in Tokio. "We all expected it. Wasn't Togo in command?"

While Togo thus drives himself hard and responsibility sits heavily upon him, he is by no means a martinet. He is a strict disciplinarian and expects every man to do his tasks, "and a little more" as a lieutenant who served under him in the China-Japan war added, but the glimpses of his human side that his men catch every once in a while make them understand him thoroughly in plain Anglo-Saxon words. "Outside the science of war Togo himself confesses that his knowledge is limited."

Not Like Japanese.

In appearance Admiral Togo looks more like the ordinary sea-captain of England or America than a Japanese. His short, bristly gray beard is largely responsible for this resemblance and marks him from his fellow officers. He is also not so scant of stature as the average Jap, and his eyes show very little slant. Like the average officer of the mikado he does not know how to wear a uniform, the worst especially showing numerous wrinkles where it should fit snugly. But while he thus approaches Caustudy was the purpose for which cadets D. and F. were appointed to the cruiser Aurora. These young gentlemen have been wonderfully giving, excessive leave, and the commander-in-chief now purposes to extend their holdings for such a lengthy period that they will be as weary of play as they now are of work. A whole series of similar orders was issued with the result that officers were terrified into hard work and ignoramus into acquiring knowledge. If the Baltic fleet has been able to start at all, it is due to Rojestvensky and not to our fleet. Whether the admiral will prove as good in fighting as he has proved in organization and discipline remains to be seen. His opinions are definite enough. He is an enthusiastic believer in the big battleship, likening each armored vessel to a separate army corps, a unit in itself, which retains its value though the fleet of which it formed part may have been destroyed or dispersed. When St. Petersburg vacillated about the dispatch of the squadron on the ground that a fleet without torpedo boats and scouting ships was useless, Rojestvensky replied that he wanted only battleships and armored cruisers. "A fleet gains in mobility by not being hampered with small craft" is one of his dicta. He declared that the Japanese successes at Port Arthur were not gained really by torpedo boats and destroyers, but by the battleships behind them. His whole conception of a naval battle is a fight between big ships until the bigger and more powerful destroy the smaller and weaker.

Not A Favorite.

Among his officers the Russian admiral is not a favorite. They declare that they never know his mind, and that he springs surprises of blame upon them without warning. Many an officer whose mark has been spotted with out comment by the admiral has afterwards found his name written in an ironical reprimand addressed to negligent officers generally. Rojestvensky has none of the bluff heartiness of manner associated usually with such genuine seamen. He is said never to express approval, and he always issues blame in such a way as to make the culprit feel it most.

His men, however, like him. To them also he is reserved and apparently unapproachable. But he is a dresser of grievances, and he has lived on the lower deck instead of in the admiral's stateroom would have made an excellent "sea lawyer." He examines the sailors' clothes, eats their food, and tests their hammocks, and if anything is wrong never ceases until he has got St. Petersburg to set it right. He never expresses comradeship with or affection for his men. They are there, he implies, to do their duty, and he looks after their welfare only because it facilitates the doing of duty.

Rojestvensky, nevertheless, has his human side. Neatness of person and irreproachable uniforms he regards almost as important as gunnery and seamanship. His own appearance is not distinguished, though his features are regular and he has a lifelong wart over the nose, which is the subject of much joking among irreverent "mitchens." The admiral, however, is invariably unarmed like an emperor, and in this condition he will grab in grimy stokeholds and pick his way among the greasy cases of bed for hours in the hope of discovering something wrong. He is intensely punctilious, and is responsible for the paraphrase of Bacon, "Manners make seamen." Another foible is his love of pretty surroundings. His office under the gilt spire of St. Petersburg "Admiralty" was adorned with photographs, mirrors, relics of old friendships and cozy furniture, and resembled a lady's boudoir rather than a place of work. Apparently these harmless luxuries in no way demoralized his tough character, for his long swims and solitary cruises in single handed yachts are constantly referred to in the Russian press.

Rojestvensky did not want the command of the Baltic fleet, though once appointed, he never wavered in his belief that it should be sent out.

Rear Admiral Rojestvensky.

Rojestvensky is a skin disciplinarian but he differs from all disciplinarians past and present. Blame in the form of a string of anathemas might be expected from a "dread admiral." Rojestvensky, however, is a humorist and during the last six months he has been warring his ill-mated officers and men into efficiency by characteristic methods. Instead of storming or reprimanding he issued periodically "general orders, holding on careless and ignorant officers to the decision of the fleet."

"The commander-in-chief of the second Pacific squadron," runs one of these, "has to inform the fleet that

Knives In Cuba.

A party writing to the Post this morning mentions the knife-carrying habit so much in vogue in Cuba, and asks that we continue our campaign against it. We will continue the campaign against this vice until the proper notice has been taken of it, though this he fears from now. All of the lower classes, with hardly an exception, carry murderous knives. If they cannot afford to buy a knife from a store they find a piece of steel and sharpen it into a deadly weapon and carry it wrapped in a piece of paper about their clothes, ready to use on the slightest occasion. The result of this is many murders, which would not occur under other circumstances. If the police were instructed to keep on the watch for knife carriers it would be but a very short time until the habit would become unpopular.

Consumption
