THE UPPER CLASSES

IN ENGLAND ARE NOW DAILY RIDICULED.

They Have Fallen Upon Evil Days—Nobody Seems to Care Anything About These Poor Folk.

London Mail: Fifty years ago the English upper classes were a popular and highly respected institution. Like Shakespeare or the lord mayor, their doings were regarded as an interesting and creditable portion of British life. Newspapers were written mostly for and about them; all laws were made with due regard to their comfort; railway companies, shops and the builders of houses vied with one another for the honor of tending their bodies, and the church was quite kind about trying to save their souls.
—Alack! on what evil days have these poor folk fallen now! Who cares two pence for them, body or soul? What modern curate would cross the road to convert a sinner if he were on his way to a weekly meeting of a thieves' club in the slums? Do you suppose that one of the vast modern emporiums in Oxford street or Kensington has any other feeling about a marchioness than some uneasy wonder as to whether she will pay her bill? Are not railway companies daily tell-first-class passengers that they are a public nuisance? And would not the approval of a new law be regarded with positive vexation by its makers and profound distrust by its victims? Except in a few restaurants and hotels, where they are forced to hide themselves, where one or two good-natured and pitiful artists will still consent to devise dishes for them, and an orchestra will amiably do its best to soothe away recollection of the world's chilling contempt, the English upper classes are daily flouted, ridiculed, plundered or ignored. The newspapers have banished them into a little corner headed "Court and Society," from which there is no escape unless one of them is "run in" by the police; and the late J. R. Green has banished their ancestors' out of the history books, so that in a modern history of the English people it is the height of absurdity to mention a Howard. Only the committees of charitable societies are left to care about them in life or death.

When one looks round for possible methods of advertisement and self-assertion, one perceives immediately that now is the precise moment. Poverty and lack of work are the fashionable methods of drawing attention to one's self to-day, and where are they to be found in more aggravated form than in the class which we are considering? It was but a short time ago, being in the company of two financial experts, we fell to considering what kind of person was the poorest in London, and came to the unanimous conclusion that a man with £5,000 a year was about the poorest person in London under the ordinary circumstances of family life—i. e., if he were married and had five children.
It is at this precise point of the financial scale that things are "expected" of a household. You may not live in Battersea, with a parlor maid and a pony trap, and go to the upper boxes of theatres, and give your dinner guests cheap claret on such an income.

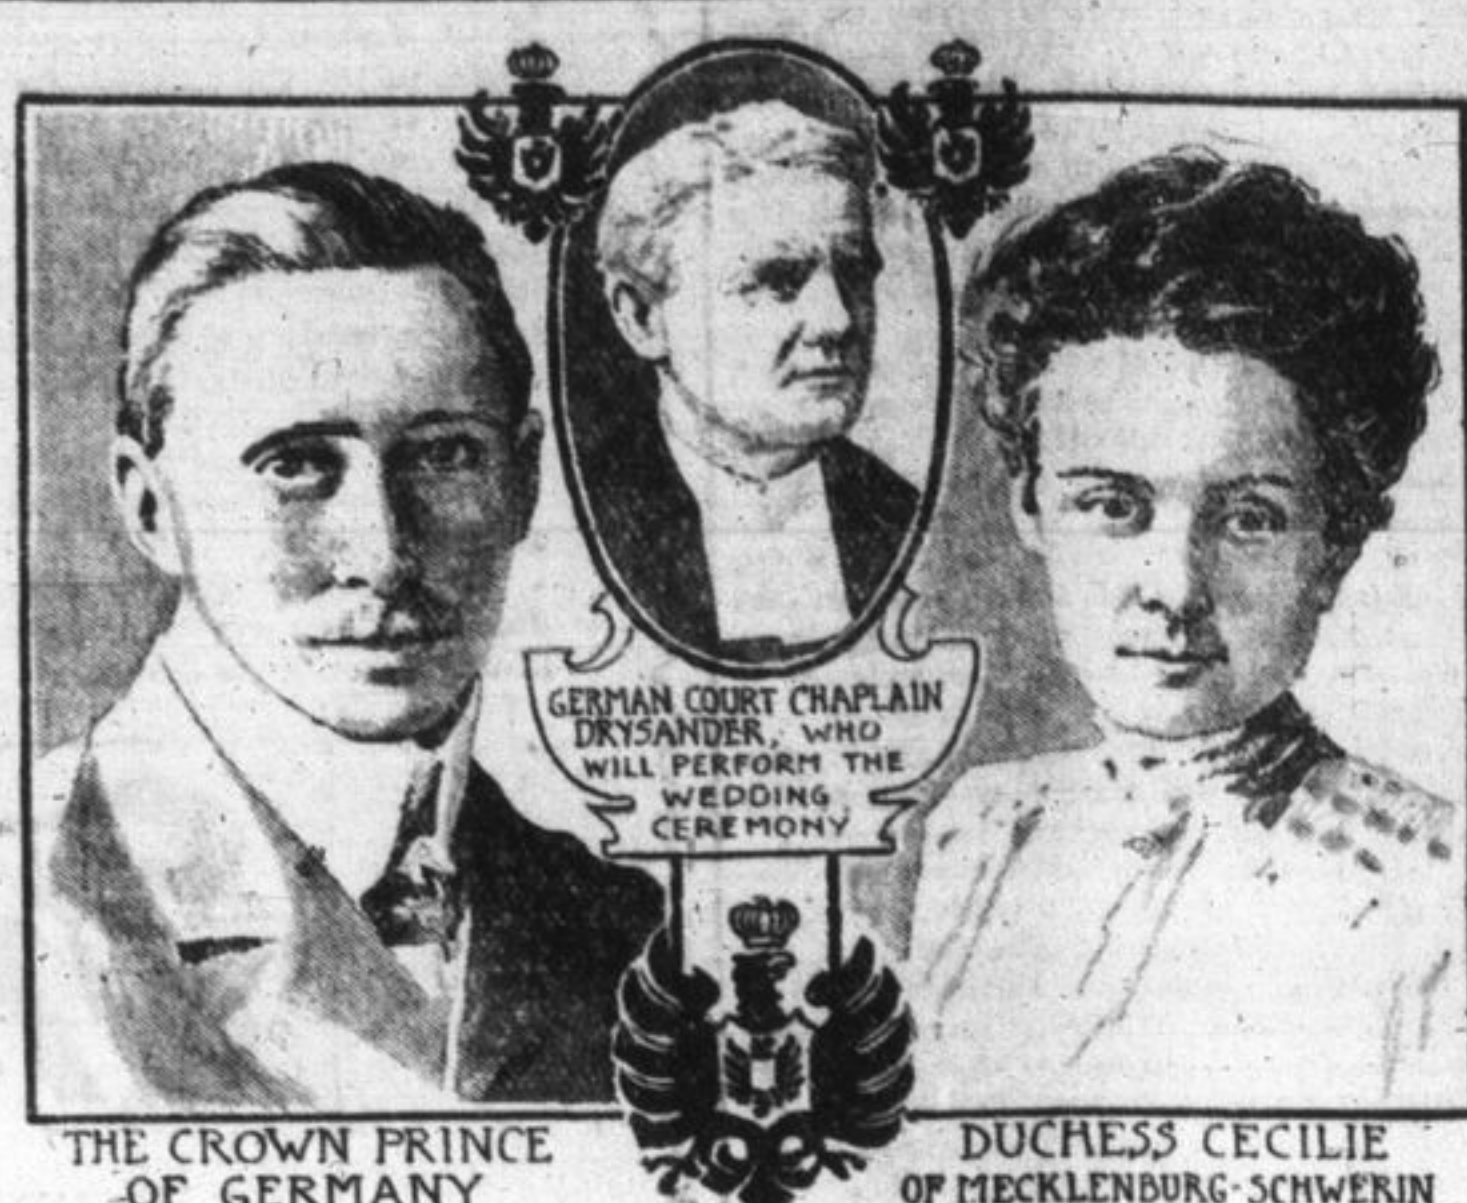

You must have a house in Mayfair, which is just a little beyond your means with a butler and footman to match, and more luncheon and dinner parties than you can afford, in order to give these persons something to do. Luncheon guests mean expensive white wine, or whiskey, which is even more expensive, because, in the words of a famous photographic company, the guest takes one glass, and the butler drinks the rest. Dinner means champagne, and entertaining in general means flowers, silver, glass and table linen, all costing more than you can afford to begin with, and all wanting constant renewal.
Then comes the man or woman with the charitable subscription list, the petition for your name as "steward" of a charitable dinner, or patroness of a bazaar, where every one below the rank of countess will be plundered, and those above it be the most resolute plunderers, so that the name of "patroness" in your case is a fraud and a delusion.
The family man with £5,000 a year, and his financial affinity, the bachelor with £500 a year—are certainly, as I say, the poorest people in London; but there is another class who, without being as poor, live through-out their lives in what is known as "embarrassed circumstances." This is a duke or similar personage with £50,000 a year.
Is there a man in London more habitually and helplessly unable to put his hand on a £10 note without defrauding somebody? His palaces in England, Scotland and Ireland, and family house in London, must each have a regiment of servants, with a housekeeper to look after them, and an army corps of gardeners, farmhands and estate office clerks, with bailiffs, head gardeners and estate agents.

Combination, advertisement and resolution, as has been said, must come into play. No longer must democratic France and America have a monopoly of lordly "trains-de-luxe" for first-class passengers only, running at preposterous fares through the country, while the rest of the traffic is held up to let them pass. The trains must be brought into England, and if the pampered and haughty second and third class passengers in this country rather decline to sit in a siding while they go by, as will now probably be the case, extra lines must be built for them.
Curates, vicars and a bishop must be retained for the exclusive purpose of attending to the souls of these neglected folk; and when the curate abandons his business, to spend a happy evening with a burglar, who has just broken into his congregation's house, he must be sternly fettered back to his work.
As for the history of the English upper classes, which has been so shamefully and ridiculously derided by Mr. Green, and his followers—well, for a small consideration, I will write it myself.

Automatic Baby Nurse.

An ingenious Swiss mechanic claims to have invented an automatic baby nurse. The apparatus is attached to a cradle. If the baby cries, air waves cause specially arranged wires to operate a photograph, which sings a lullaby, while simultaneously clock-work is released and rocks the cradle. When the crying ceases the wire fails to vibrate and the cradle stops rocking.

CRADLE OF TEARS

In Which Are Placed Griets of World.
Theodore Dreiser, in West's Magazine: "There is a cradle within the door of one of the great institutions of New York before which a constantly recurring tragedy is being enacted. It is a plain cradle, quite simply draped in white, but with such a look of cozy comfort about it that one would scarcely suspect it to be a cradle of sorrow.
And this cradle is the most useful and, in a way, the most inhabited cradle in the world: Day after day, and year after year, it is the recipient of more small wayfaring souls than any other cradle in the history of the race. In it the real children of sorrow are placed, and over it more tears are shed than if it were an open grave.
It is the place where annually 1,200 foundlings are placed—the silent witnesses of more truly heartbreaking scenes than any other cradle since the world began. For nearly thirty-five years it has stood where it does to-day, ready-draped, open, while as many thousand mothers have stolen shamefacedly in and, after looking

Perfect Soda Water.

Ours is perfect because we manufacture it with acropolis cases. Every thing we use is pure and fresh. Our soda water is as cold as ice can make it. We use nothing but pure fruit juices. Pure ice cream and large, thin glasses. Wade's Drug Store.
A lemon bath is the latest fad. Several lemons are sliced into the water and allowed to lie for half an hour. A remarkable sense of freshness is given to the skin by the acidulated water.

FLESH BUILDER

The liver of the cod fish produces oil that is a wonderful flesh builder. No fat or oil can compare with it in that respect. To get the best out of it, it must be emulsified and made like cream. In Scott's Emulsion it is prepared in the best possible form to produce the best possible results. Thirty years have proven this.

The injured were: John Lewis, William Splane, Richard Clifford and Charles Devlin. Happily no bones were broken.
Chamberlain's Cough Remedy the Very Best.
"I have been using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and want to say it is the best cough medicine I have ever taken," says George E. Chubb, a merchant of Harlan, Mich. There is no question about its being the best, as it will cure a cough or cold in less time than any other treatment. It should always be kept in the house ready for instant use, for a cold can be cured in much less time when promptly treated. For sale by all druggists.
