the Russo-Japanese War -- Changes in New York City. (Special Correspondence, Letter 1.465.) New York, June 23.-It is hardly too much to say that our entire community, not only the state of New York, but the United States experienced a startling shock when it was whispered abroad that the peace negotiations which we considered settled were about to be broken off. It is the belief that Gen. Linevitch had telegraphed the czar that he was telegraphed the czar that he was on the very eve of a great victory, lead-ing the czar to believe that he was in a position where he could reasonably hope for the greatest victory of the war. It was apparent to those who had watched the newspapers that the czar had been giving a half-hearted assent to the peace negotiations.

Japan came out boldly and gave the envoys to understand that she would forced upon her. Japan was not going to surrender the valuable assets
