DIVE OF 3,000 FEET

OPERATOR POWERLESS AS MACHINE TURNS OVER.

Clings Desperately to Seat—Picked Up With Blood Flowing from Ears and Mouth—Previous Ascents a Success.

San Jose, Cal., July 19.—Daniel Maloney, who has made numerous successful ascensions with Prof. Montgomery's aeroplane, yesterday, fell 3,000 feet to his death at Santa Clara.

About 3,000 persons watched with interest the machine as it shot upward attached to a huge balloon.

At a height of 4,000 feet Maloney cut loose from the balloon and began manoeuvring with the aeroplane. He sailed gracefully about and then as a sudden death.

Maloney was clinging desperately to his seat and evidently endeavoring to regain control of the aeroplane, but all his efforts were in vain.

Again the aeroplane turned in the air, the wings came together and the man and machine plunged straight downward.

A number of cadets carried him to a hospital. His skull was fractured and blood was flowing from his ears and mouth. He died within a short time. The aeroplane was demolished.

BACK FROM NEW ONTARIO.

Dr. Knight Enthusiastic Over What He Saw.

Dr. A. P. Knight, of Queen's, has returned from a six week's camping experience in New Ontario, with his son, Cyril Knight, and C. W. Dickson. The party went out about the first of June to prospect, and within a week located a mining claim. This claim contains a vein of amethyst and silver running along the surface about 120 feet, and averaging from one-half inch, to one and one quarter inches in width.

Mr. Knight, who is a late graduate of Queen's science department spent last summer in this region with Prof. Miller, helping the latter map it out geologically, but did not prospect.

Less than a dozen veins have been discovered this spring, although close on 1,500 men have been working.

Dr. Knight says the district is enormously rich in silver, the rich vein covering a circle of four or five miles in diameter. To show just how rich it is, last week eight men took out twenty tons of silver, averaging 82,000 to the ton. The experience of others is precisely similar. The resources of this region are almost untold.

70,000 TINS OF PEAS

Put Up Daily in Bloomfield Factory.

Bloomfield, July 17.—The summer of 1905 will long be remembered as being the wettest on record. Although this is the haying season, the weather has been most unfavorable, and much of the crop which has been cut has been housed in a damaged condition.

The water has done considerable damage to grain and hoe crops. Miss Florence Walters, Alberta, N.W.T., is home on a visit. The canning factories are running about eighteen hours daily in order to handle the heavy crop of peas.

The Bell Telephone company are erecting more new lines around Bloomfield. One of the linemen, Roy McWhinn, fell from the top of a thirty-foot pole, alighting on his feet, causing injuries which will confine him to his bed for a week. W. A. Johnson has gone on a short visit to the N. W. T.

He was in Wellington Saturday evening, and purchased a can of coal oil. He left a letter in his house telling his instructions. He resided alone. Mr. Chadsey owned a 300-acre farm, and one of the finest orchards in Prince Edward county grew on it, some years yielding 3,000 barrels of apples. Some lions and a butt of a revolver were found in the ruins, which leaves no doubt as to his death.

WAS HEARD TO-DAY

APPEAL AGAINST VERDICT OF COMPTON, J.P.

Three Witnesses Report Evidence at Former Trial—Held Over to Allow Counsel to Get Further Evidence.

At the court house, this morning, Judge Madden, Nanaimo, sat in judgment to hear the appeal against the verdict of Justice of the Peace Compton, who recently fined R. J. Fair and John Ferguson $10 each for abandoning the bridge on the Perth Road, which crosses Loughboro Lake beyond Inverary. The witnesses, three in number, R. J. Fair, ex-Warden Stonness, and County Clerk Edwards repeated the evidence they gave at the former trial. Both sides practically admitted the facts brought out in the witness box, and the case simmered down to a question of law, J. L. Whiting, K.C., looking after the interests of the road company, and John Moss, Toronto, having charge of the county's case. The only new evidence brought out by the last named gentleman, who in cross-examination of R. J. Fair, elicited the information that he had met a man with a three inch machine about to cross the bridge in question. Witness told him not to, but the man said he must. Fair finally offered him $6 to go around by way of Railton, which was accepted.

In arguing the case, Mr. Whiting submitted that the road was built on private property, and the company had a right to abandon the bridge, provided it was not an intermediary portion of the road. He claimed that the bridge in question was a terminus and that the road company had simply abandoned it, after notifying the council of the county to that effect. Afterwards, to safeguard the life and property of residents, they had placed fences at the approaches. All had been done with a view to evading the common liability law. The county had the right to take over the property if they wished.

On the contrary, Mr. Moss argued that the part in question was an intermediary part of the road, and not a terminus. Again the road existed as the property of the company during the time proceedings were being enacted for its abandonment, and during the time the council were being notified of the company's act, and right up to the moment the abandonment was consummated. While the company might own the land on each side of the lake, they could not own the land below the lake. Again, if the company had intended a proper abandonment of the road, their liability was at an end, and they had no more right to rush in and build fences to obstruct wayfarers, than had the speaker himself.

"Not even to save life," suggested Judge Madden.

After further argument and citing of like cases and statutes bearing on the appeal, the matter was finally held in abeyance to allow counsel against the granting of the appeal to prepare further authorities bearing on his views. Upon receiving these the judge will immediately issue his decision.
