Welcome To Our Boys.

To-day we welcome the old boys, and we trust they will feel rejuvenated as a result of their visit.

So many have come out, beyond the confines of the home, and in the exercise of that expansive policy which is generally commended. Our sons cannot remain forever under the old roof-tree. They could not if they would.

They take hence, into other fields of labor, an affection for the home that never dies. Wherever they are they turn to the place of their birth and boyhood.

Two years ago, when the first old boys' event was planned, those turned up who had not been seen for long, long years, and they renewed their youth. The air was vibrant with their laughter, their glad exclamations, their hearty cheers and loud applause.

Some who participated in that reunion have since passed to the silent majority. They will be seen and heard no more.

But others will come—others who could not come in 1903 nor last year—and next year still others will return, and so the anniversary will grow in interest and intensity.

The city, some of the boys say, has not changed much. They can find the landmarks that were associated with stirring events in their careers. And the visitors have not changed much. Some of them have grown younger, in feeling. The strain and stress of business being removed they are boys again—just for a day.

What is life, after all, but a span, so short at the best, so varied in its experiences. A few years at most and the brightest and the happiest have romped and played for the last time. The cheery good-bye, at the door, as a friend after friend departs, becomes presently, sometimes suddenly, the last good-night, and memory does the rest.

Great Object Lesson.

The case of Gaynor and Greene, who are held in Montreal on a serious charge, that of misappropriating hundreds of thousands of dollars, is giving Canadians an object lesson. They are showing that money can do a great deal, and that under its influence the law, in all its intricacies, can be invoked to some purpose, and that purpose to delay the return of the fugitives to the United States.

For a time they lived in freedom at Quebec and had their experience with the lawyers and the court there. Then the scene of their excitement shifted to Montreal. In the meanwhile there was a kidnapping, or an attempted kidnapping, with them as the principals in the performance.

Some time later Judge Lafontaine held an extradition court and took evidence which warranted him in ruling that the men should go whence they came and face a trial for their offense.

There is to be appeal, from one court to another, and it is expected that months will transpire ere the gauntlet has been run in Canada.

Meanwhile Gaynor and Greene are residing with the governor of the jail in Montreal, in confinement but in the enjoyment of all the comforts that money can buy. Having plenty of the needful they are not sparing it on any account.

Some day they may reach the southern court and be called upon to account for their misdeeds. But the chances are that they will never be punished. They have had already a respite in Canada that is unparalleled, and they have before them the delays of the United States courts, and the length or continuity of them depends upon their money bags.

A remnant of the spoils may be saved, but the original sum will have to be a pretty large one to stand the expense which is now going on, and the legal trip has only been begun.

Uncle Sam Fascinated.

Thomas E. Watson, in his magazine, which is read by everybody, at least by every politician, simply boils over with wrath as he contemplates the waste of public money upon the court service of England.

Whitelaw Reid, of the New York Tribune, having been appointed ambassador of the United States at the court of St. James, and found himself settled in London, was at once launched into a round of entertainments. The first was a banquet, and in his opening speech he undertook to define the duties of his office. He may have been regarded as felicitous in this, but Mr. Watson esteems him as very unfortunate.

Mr. Reid, in essence, said the chief duty was to rise equal to a British welcome and British hospitality, to be equal to the fascinating and bewildering duty of making the acquaintance of those who have influenced the world and contributed to the times in which they lived.

According to Mr. Watson the ambassador undertook a serious task, and succeeded in saying that in order "to earn his money he had to rise to the demands of British hospitality," to make himself equal to the fascinating but bewildering task of becoming acquainted with the lords and ladies who control Great Britain, and to exert himself in some sort of mental struggle which consists in accepting one-fifth of the charming invitations which pour in upon him, and in refusing the other four-fifths without causing international complications, catastrophes, cataclysms.

Mr. Watson becomes alarmed as he contemplates the exposure of this fustian to no purpose. No purpose? He sees Great Britain, through the ambassadors sent to it, leading the United States into folly, luring it on to an imitation of it in all things, financial, social, imperial, colonial.

"Unconsciously," he shouts, "the United States has become second fiddle to Great Britain. The United States government is England's assiduous ape." The article throughout is breezy and brusque. In it the writer relieves himself of some vigorous thoughts, and of course, he feels better.

The old boys and old girls will please get in by nine o'clock. Perhaps Curlew may not ring to-night.

Yesterday was baby's day on the street railway. And the cars were full of them, and their cries.

Only Tories can sell marriage licenses. Only Tories will be able to tie the knot presently. The game is progressive.

The hay crop is so heavy that hands cannot get to harvest it. There has to be a kick about something, in the crop line.

What species of treason is this? A member of the house of lords wants something done to put an end to Chamberlain's "quackery."

With wheat at $1.30 a bushel, and the market cornered for the present, some people are feeling anxious about the bread supply. Don't worry.

OH THAT WILL BE GLORY.

When all my labors and trials are o'er,
And I am safe on that beautiful shore,
Just to be near the dear Lord I adore,
Will through the ages, be glory for me.

Chorus—
Oh that will be glory for me,
Glory for me, glory for me, glory for me,
When by His grace, I shall look on His face.

That will be glory, be glory for me.

When by the gift of his infinite grace
I am accorded in Heaven a place,
Just to be near the dear Lord I adore,
Will through the ages be glory for me.

Friends will be there I have loved long
Joy like a river around me will flow;
Yet, just a smile from my Saviour I know,
Will through the ages be glory for me.

HE GOT THE LIQUOR WHICH LED TO HIS UNTIMELY DEATH.

The Law Touching Sunday Was Violated—The Statements of a Clergyman at a Riton Funeral.

Pictou, July 29.—Undeniably he was given on the Sabbath, the liquor which practically caused his death, was the rather sensational charge, uttered by Rev. W. L. Armitage, during his address, at the funeral of the late Thomas Fogarty, the well-known painter, drowned in the harbor, Monday.

Continuing, in part, he said: "There may be some, within my hearing, who were with him, and it is to circumstances, hoping that you may, from now on, abstain from the dreadful curse. But it is the fact, that liquor can be obtained on Sunday, which no one can deny, that is so sad a circumstance, that it is to be deplored." The funeral services in St. Mary's church, under the direction of the I.O.F., were largely attended. Rev. Mr. Armitage's sermon was closely followed, and the warlike commendation in the hearts and minds of all who were present.
