Alds, Sears and Sands and Architect Newlands were present to lay the matter before the board, and the members present agreed to examine the plans and have an informal discussion. There are a couple of changes in the present plans of the architect from the proposal outlined a few weeks ago. It is proposed to give the board's secretary the present office of the mayor, tor's old office. No change would be made with the city assessor's office. The mayor and the city solicitor would have their offices in the alcove which it is proposed to build in. Mr. Newlands estimated the cost at $5.

Ald. Sears stated that it was doubt ful if any by-law would have to be submitted to the people because could be shown that there would James Brickwood, game inspector a full return for the expenditure curred. The case was exceptional. Mr. Thompson doubted if any money could be expended by the city on capital account without a by-law gopast to make Americans take out fish- as his opinion that if the question went to the people, it would be d

Some of the board members expressed themselves that the proposals were worth examination. They recognized that the city buildings would be improved and that the accommodation for themselves and their officials could be quite substantial. The only jection that might be raised was to whether the present board head quarters were not more central, but this was of little consequence. At next meeting of the board, a definite expression of orinion will be given.

Man in his progress is driving them from their natural elements. It is only in the menageries of the great circuses that a very great majority of these strange and curious creatures may be seen. Norris & Rowe are rapidly getting the largest and most complete collection of animals, and new specimens captured in the jungles and fastnesses of all the world are being added. The number has grown to such proportions that the young circus owners were compelled to order larger tents and join the two menageries into one huge double affair. The Norris & Rowe greater circus will exhibit at Kingston, on Friday, August 18th.
