The Store for Style

THE very persistency with which we emphasize style and novelty is apt to prejudice some people against the store, for fear our goods may also be expensive. But are they? Does any one presume for a moment that every-day business would keep climbing up if prices were in any sense extravagant?

Certainly we claim pre-eminence in many respects as regards style; but our customers do not pay extra on account of that. Buying direct from manufacturers, and for spot cash, enables us to name prices which would be quite out of the question with less perfect purchasing arrangements. We are in touch with the largest and best producers of two continents, and to their cost of production is but added one profit to make the price you pay.
