BABY GIRL'S AWFUL HUMOUR

Would Scab Over, Break Open, and Be Raw—Intense Suffering for Two Years—Doctors and Medicines Failed to Help Her.

CURED BY CUTICURA WHEN ALL ELSE FAILED

Writing under date of August 15, 1904, Mrs. L. C. Walker, of 5 Tremont Street, Woodford, Me., says: "My sister had a terrible humour on her shoulder when she was eighteen months old, causing intense suffering for two years. We had several doctors, and tried everything, but in spite of all we did it kept spreading. One day it would scab over and then crack open and a watery matter oozed from it and the scabs would all fall off. It would be raw for a time, then scab over again. Some ointments and Cuticura, and we immediately procured a box of Cuticura Ointment, and a cake of Cuticura Soap. She was much better after the first bath with warm water and soap, and an application of the Ointment. Before it was half gone we saw a marked change for the better, and she was entirely cured, without a scar being left, by the use of Cuticura Ointment and one cake of Soap. Her skin is now entirely clear, and she has not had a sign of trouble since."

That Cuticura Soap is the best baby soap in the world for cleansing and purifying the skin, and that Cuticura Ointment is of priceless value for soothing and healing torturing, disfiguring eruptions, itching, and chafings. A single application of Cuticura Ointment, preceded by a warm bath with Cuticura Soap, gives instant relief, and refreshing sleep for skin-tortured babies, and rest for tired, fretted mothers.

BROADBRIM'S

Letter From Greater New York. AFTERMATH PEACE

PROPHET SAW FARTHER THAN ULTRA-PESSIMIST.

And "Teddy" Was the First—Mikado Drove Tycoon to Temple, Where he Belonged—Little Nation the Peer of Any.

Special Correspondence. Letter No. 1,479 New York, Sept. 15.—The agony is over; the commissioners, appointed by their respective governments, have signed the treaty and over all the land a mighty wave of congratulation swept everything before it as a cyclone sweeps feathers from its path. Emperors, kings, princes, potentates, the great rulers of the earth, on the swift and silent lightning's wing, flashed joyful messages of congratulation and thanks to the prophet of peace in the city of Washington, hailing him as the great Hebrew leader and prophet of old, was hailed by Israel's suffering sons and daughters—as God's appointed chief; who was to lead them out of Egypt's darkness and bondage to the blessings of freedom and the attainment of the promised land.

When the black clouds of hopeless failure darkened the sorrowing vision of the ultra pessimist, who saw nothing but failure and disgrace, ridicule and contempt as the reward of our self-appointed and misguided leader, he, with a prophetic vision, that defied the threatened evil portent, saw through the rifts of the darkening clouds the silver light that gave promise of a happier and brighter day, in the vocabulary of which there was no such word as fail. It is true, there had been lions in the path, with pitfalls and quicksands, pregnant with danger and death, but a bold and determined front made the lion seek safety in his forest lair and the careful guard of the treacherous path showed the way to security, rest and peace. The treaty commissioners appointed by Russia and Japan were pretty evenly matched; the rudeness, and almost Russian coarseness of Mr. Witte, was met with a diplomatic and imperturbable politeness by Baron Komura that would have satisfied the dying Chesterfield. When Mr. Witte was asked by a correspondent, if Russia paid any indemnity, he is said to have replied "No, Sir; not a sou! Not one sou!" It was not so much what he said as the contemptuous tone in which he said it; such an exhibition of temper at that time would have been exceedingly bad manners in a host-carrier or a postmaster, but in a first class diplomat it was little less than a crime. It is an axiom, trite as it is true, and as old as the hills, "That it is the unexpected that usually happens." The truth of the proverb finds a striking illustration in the treaty of peace between Russia and Japan. While the great nations of the earth, and all civilized lands on the globe joined in the hallooing and hosanna the capitols of the two empires most concerned in the treaty, were all ablaze with revolution. Anarchy and mob violence rule the hour; murder, red handed and brutal, strikes down an imperial minister almost in the presence of the mikado; the lurid flames of burning pagodas, fired by incendiary hands, from Wakhama to Nekaska rodden the midnight sky. Can it be possible that the recent eclipse has had any influence upon the Japanese? Shakespeare, in describing a similar outbreak of crime says "It is the very error of the moon, that comes more near the earth than she was wont that makes men mad." The ignorant and murderous mob knew nothing of the magnificent victory that their country had achieved in confirming the treaty of peace. Victorious on land and sea; destroying in a single night one of the most tremendous war fleets that ever floated on the sea, she was in the position to be magnanimous to a beaten foe; with the terrible red slaughter of two hundred thousand Russian dead around the smoking ruins of Mukden, and such an unparalleled succession of victories, unclouded by a single defeat, Japan could well afford to scatter six hundred millions of dollars to the four winds of heaven, when money and humanity appealed to her for the sacrifice. By that single act Japan achieved an attitude of honor and immortal glory attained in so short a time by no other nation in the history of the world.

Just think of the astonishing progress made by this marvelous and wonderful people. It is only just about sixty years since the gates of Japan were closed as tight as a drum against the outside world; she had a civilization and identity all her own, sufficient for her wants, and equal to her desires. The children of toil cheerfully performed their allotted tasks as their fathers had done generations before them; the great mikado ruled with a mild and gentle sway; untroubled order reigned throughout the land, peace and plenty were supreme and universal. But as soon as the gates were unbarred Japan realized how far she was behind the outside world's advanced civilization; the work of reform began; 2,000 students were sent to Europe and America to spy out the land, they saw everything, nothing worth learning escaped their investigation, and they brought back to their native land stores of knowledge and mines of educational wealth that Japanese manipulation transmuted into gold. For thousands of years Japan had a dual government, a mikado and a tycoon; the tycoon governed all the temples and holy places; the mikado administered the civil, judicial and military powers; under the new reign it was cumbersome and impossible. The mikado drove the tycoon to the temples, where he belonged, and thereunder ruled the empire alone.

Arts and manufactures were introduced, and to-day Japan has cotton mills that pay forty and fifty per cent, annual dividends, and which in fine machinery and the high character of goods produced rival the best cotton mills of Lowell or Fall River. Her foundries are turning out steel rails which, owing to the low price of labor and the abundance of her iron mines, she can put on the market at a lower rate than they can be manufactured by any other country in the world, and with which, no doubt, she intends to gridiron Korea, down to the borders of Manchuria.

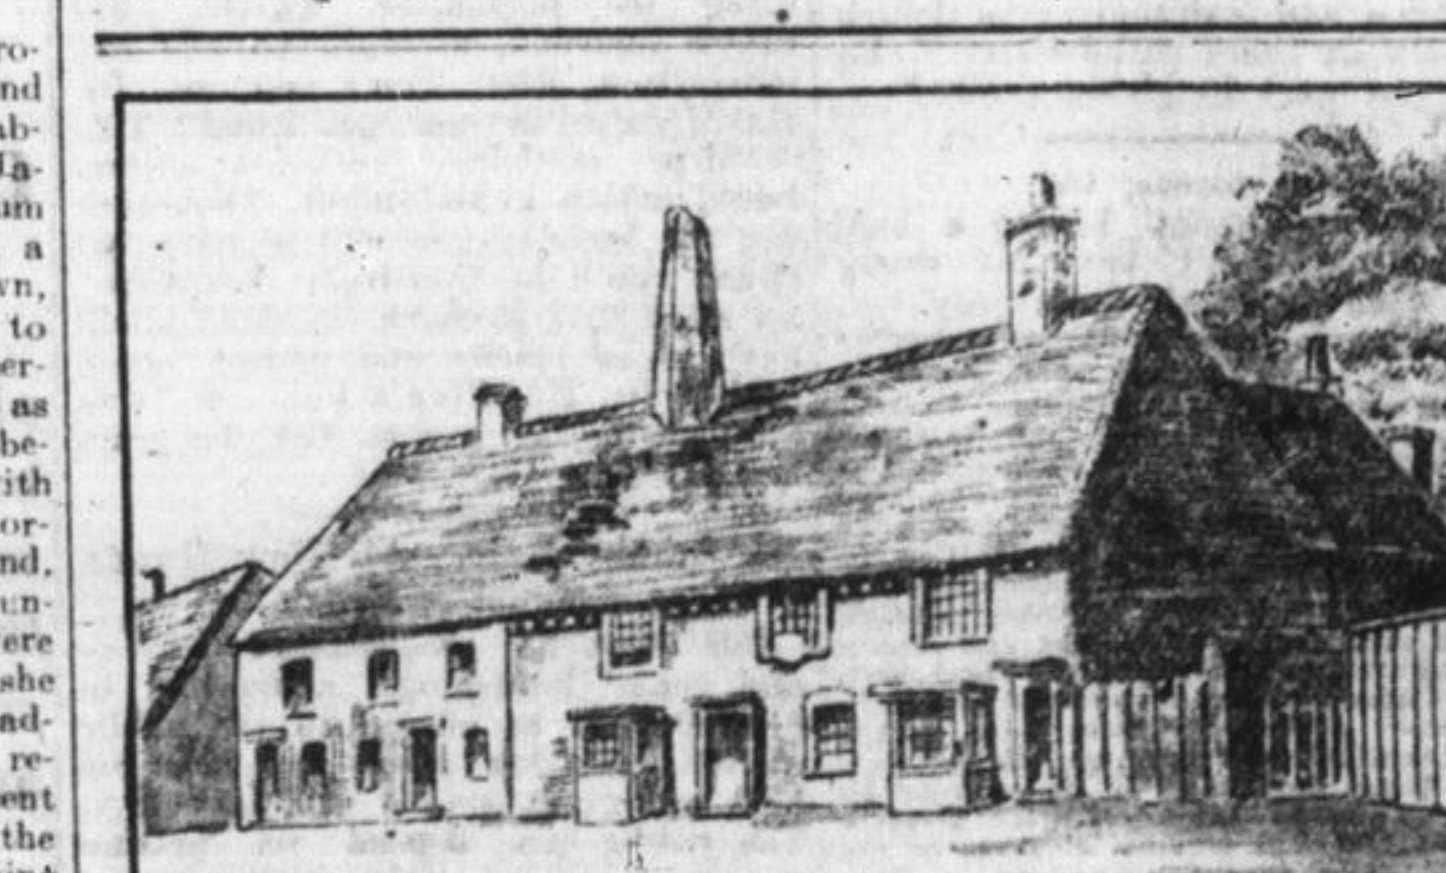

She is also making magnificent monster cannon, equal to the best turned out by Krupp, at Essen. She is building mighty warships of steel, and is extending her engines that are to move them, and is piling up thousands of tons of the best fixed ammunition which is to make them effective in a fight. In electrical appliances Japan does not fear comparison with the best of the world. Her electric power is the perfect system and the broad humanity of her hospitals and her other charitable institutions loses none when compared with the best in England, France or Germany.

Don't be alarmed, good people, if there is a little row now in Yokohama and Tokio. We know something about riots in New York. In the draft riots in 1863, the mob held the city by the throat for a week, negroes were hunted down and killed like dogs; Col. A. Brien was hung to a lamp post, and when he was still alive his body was cut down and dragged through the streets by a pack of savages who have no equals in Japan.

Tokio and Yokohama are not dense high when compared with Chicago and Cincinnati. In Chicago riot, red-handed, stalks abroad at noonday, ready to murder. Japan has covered herself with immortal glory and to-day stands the peer of any nation on the face of the globe.

FALL TO THE POOR

CASES OF LUCK—HELD WINNING LOTTERY.

A Maid Servant Heard of Her Good Fortune While She Was Cleaning Doorsteps—Another Winner Almost Went Out of His Mind.

LONDON, 15th.—When Dame Fortune is turning a lottery wheel, it must be acknowledged, to her credit, that she usually distributes her favors in quarters where they are most needed and appreciated. She was in this benevolent mood when a very short time ago she awarded a £40,000 prize to Mue Hofer, the canton-maid, to the 25th French Dragoons; and a second prize of £5,000 to M. Cousin, a clerk who had never drawn more than £60 a year in his life.

And the history of lotteries is crowded with similar dramatic and delightful surprises which Fortune has prepared for the poor. Only a few months ago, we recall, Marie Biret, a maidservant in Paris, asked her employer to buy her a ticket in the lottery organized by the Northern League against Tuberculosis; and one fine morning when she was cleaning the doorstep she learnt that the first prize had fallen to her, and that she was a quarter of a million francs richer for her lucky purchase.

In the drawing of the great state lottery at Madrid last Christmas the prize of £200,000 was won by a struggling tradesman of Curman, to whom a hundredth part of the sum would have represented a huge fortune; and £8,000 went in smaller prizes to a few peasants in Sacedon, a poverty-stricken village in the province of Guadalajara.

The winner of the chief prize of £10,000 in the last lottery authorized by the French government on behalf of the hospital for consumptive children, was a Parisian workman called Duthell, who had bought a ticket at a cigar-shop into Duthell's workshop and he discovered that the first prize was his, he was, says Le Francois, "literally demoralized with joy, and it was feared that his brain had given way." Duthell had bought his ticket at a cigar-shop six months earlier for 1fr., and had almost forgotten the circumstances when the intoxicating news of his good fortune came to him.

It was only last year that M. Camus, clerk to a Rhems commercial firm, won a small prize of £40 in a lottery, and with the money bought a Paris city bond and a Credit Foncier debenture. In the periodical drawing his Paris bond brought him £1,000, and shortly after his Credit Foncier coupon yielded £8,000—the £12,000 being the return for an original investment of a single franc. In a recent Spanish national lottery drawing, an £8,000 prize fell to a syndicate of ten men, among whom were a cobbler, a postmaster, a waiter, a port-keeper, and an army-sergeant; while the principal prize of £35,000 went to a crew of the Italian warship Lepanto.

Quite recently, too, a sailor's fireman on the Wilson line, Mr. Murillo received the gratifying news that he had drawn the winning number in a great Austrian lottery, and that the snug little fortune of £8,000 was awaiting his claim. The lucky fireman was a man named Joseph Pletersmann, a very poor woman, who held ticket No. 47 in the Bank of the Nobility Lottery in St. Petersburg, almost lost her reason when she learnt that she had won the first prize of £20,000.

Luck, however, came too late to a Moravian called Hertz; for when news reached him that he had won a £2,000 prize in the state lottery he was commencing a life sentence of penal servitude for murder, and Charles Roster, a retail tobacconist of Chicago, when he heard that a ticket which he had just given away to a friend had won a prize of £3,000, died of a broken heart. Year after year a Vienna shopman purchased a number which he had dreamed on three consecutive nights, and for ten years his ticket "drew a blank." On December 1st, 1902, the man died, and a few days later the ticket he had purchased won a prize of £4,500.

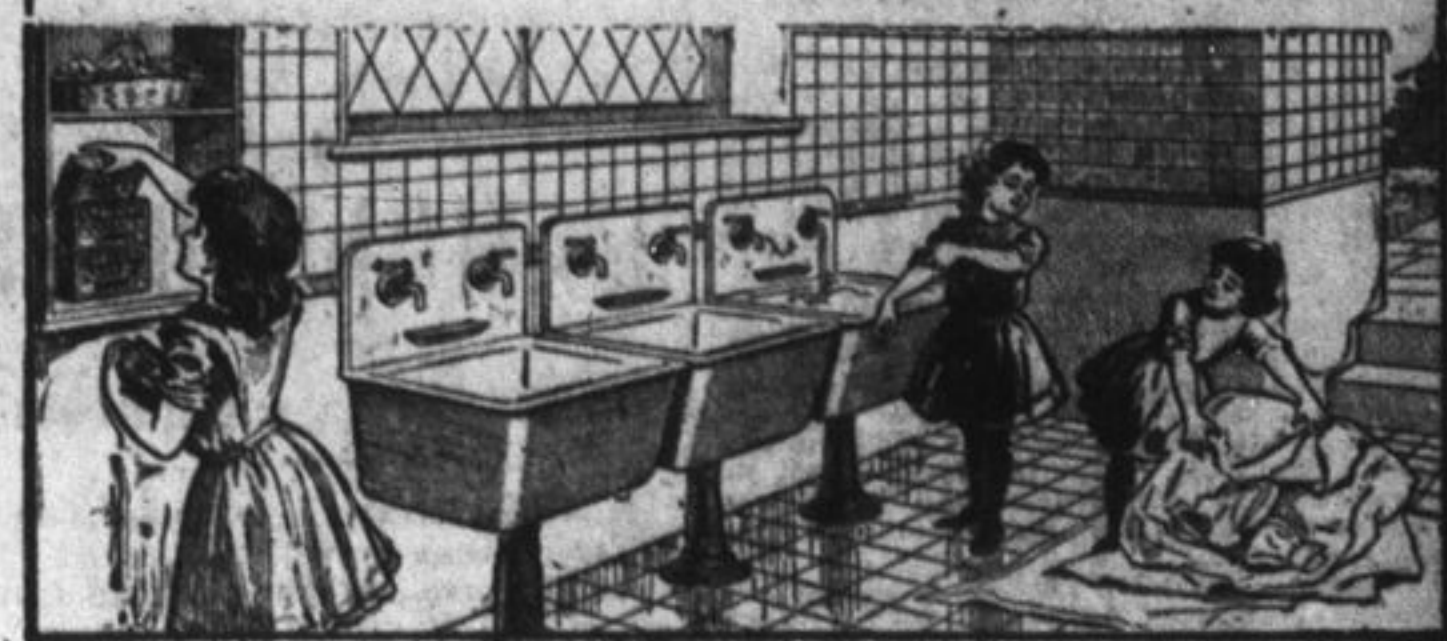

To give but one more illustration of this aspect of lottery fortune. A short time ago a Vienna paper had an advertisement offering "£500 and no questions asked" for the restoration of a Turkish lottery bond to its rightful owner. The number of the bond in question was drawn for the chief prize of £25,000 some years ago. The owner of it, however, a poor man named Mayer, did not learn of his good fortune until, by a hard stroke of luck he recently lost the bond. Being out of work and in great want, about a month ago he decided to sell the bond, and started off to the bank for that purpose. On his arrival at the bank the bond was missing. Such are some of the tragedies and ironies of lottery luck.
