A Comment on the Subject of Cattle Breeding.

ested in the very important subject of improved breeding. With your permission I would like to explain some matters in connection with register- was that to "Our Guest," proposed by kept in which the calves of all regisan inspector is sent and each animal is tested for production and superior structure which is determined actual measurement of the animal. It has been estimated that not more than one in twenty-five successfully passes the inspection; the others are rejected entirely. It will be understood then why these cattle and their offspring are valued at hundreds and often thousands of dollars each their native country. With us here in Canada the rules of our breeders' as sociations are not so stringent. that is required is a direct recorded pedigree of both dam and sire back to animals registered in original associations, but it is quite possible that when the number of pure bred animals increases sufficiently that the standard will be raised here also. It might be said that one step has already been taken where animals that attain a certain standard of production are granted a special certificate in what is called advanced registry.
