THE HATLESS WOMEN

Will Not Be Allowed in New York Church.

New York, Oct. 7.—Dr. Edward L. Stoddard, rector of St. John's Episcopal church, has stirred up a tempest against the custom of women coming to church without hats. Dr. Stoddard wrote an article which was published in the St. John's Church Bulletin, copies of which were placed in every pew at the morning service. Dr. Stoddard based his objections to "hatless" women on the seventh chapter of 1st Corinthians, in which St. Paul distinctly forbids women to remain bareheaded in church. The rector for St. Paul's objection, Dr. Stoddard says, is that the chief glory of a woman is her hair, and, naturally she devotes much time to its care. It is one of the chief vanities and therefore she should not display it in church.

The edict of the rector has caused considerable comment among the feminine members of the congregation. His position is criticized as illogical. It is admitted that the beauty of some women's hair may detract the attention of impressionable men from the sermon, but it is pointed out, that the beauty of some hats worn in church, have the same effect upon most women, as a woman's beautiful hair would have upon some men. Easter bonnets were not in use in St. Paul's time, and his objection to bare-headed women, therefore, antiquated.

Japan's Population.

Japan has an area actually 27,000 square miles greater than the British Isles and 5,000,000 more inhabitants; in other words, the population of Japan is 47,000,000, while that of Great Britain and Ireland is but 42,000,000. Japan's population exceeds that of France by nearly 9,000,000, of Italy by 15,000,000, and of Austro-Hungary by 500,000. Outside of Asia there are but three countries in all the world with greater population than Japan—Russia, the United States, and Germany.

TRAFALGAR DAY

THE MEMORY OF GREAT NELSON KEPT GREEN.

The Man Who Established Britain's Naval Supremacy—A Career of Dazzling Brilliance—His Signal His Greatest Monument.

Throughout our far-flung empire, on October 21st, will be kept the centenary of the day which marked the dawn of the naval supremacy of England—Trafalgar day, when the nation's darling, and the nation's pride, died as a Britisher, doing his duty. To-day, after one hundred turbulent years, Horatio, Viscount Nelson stands, with untarnished laurels, a dominant figure of honor, devotion and patriotism.

It was a great and a sad day for England when Nelson in the Victory, his flagship, signalled to bear down upon the French and Spanish fleets in two lines. Great, because on it was achieved one of the greatest victories of which ancient or modern history holds record—and because on it died the man whose glorious signal "England expects every man to do his duty," will remain a watchword so long as the English language shall endure.

The fifth son of Edmund Nelson, rector of Burnham Thorpe, in Norfolk, one of the many great ones who have come from quiet country rectories, England's great admiral and hero was frail of body from his childhood, on account of physical ailment, rather than overcoming it. Promising to provide for one of his sister's children—the Nelson family being very poor—his uncle, Capt. Sparkling took him on the Raisonné, on the punitive expedition sent out by England, after the seizure, by Spain, of the Falkland Islands, in 1770. With the gloomy remark from his uncle that if a cannon ball took his head off, he would, at least, be provided for, the most dazzling career the sea has ever known began. Step by step he won his way up, gaining the confidence of his superiors till he took a lieutenant's commission in 1779, and was made post-captain on a frigate before he reached twenty-one. In 1780 he greatly distinguished himself, on the brilliantly conceived, but ill-starred expedition to take Fort San Juan from the Spaniards and in 1782 came on convoy duty to Quebec. In 1783 he returned home with the West Indian fleet, and was presented at court. At that time he had won the deep esteem of Lord Hood, the most famous sea captain of the age. Later on, in the West Indies, as senior captain, he endeavored to put down the smuggling between the new United States, and the British colony, and fell out with the admiral in command, Nelson, sure of his attitude, defied the admiral, and was backed up by the government.

But his great opportunity was yet to come. In 1793 war was declared between England and France, and England's naval position was by no means secure. Nelson was given the command of the worst ship in the fleet, the Agamemnon, but with her did deals of suspenseful daring and heroic seamanship, which astonished even those who expected great things from him. Once, without waiting the order of Lord Hotham, when in 1785, the latter was engaging a French fleet, of superior force in the Mediterranean, Nelson engaged the whole of the hostile squadron, nearly all the loss to himself. His name was synonymous with energy, daring, resource and heroism, and his sailors adored him. At St. Vincent, during the battle, at a glance, he defied Admiral Jervis' orders, boarded two vessels of the enemy, leading his men on with the cry, "Victory, or Westminster Abbey," took the Spaniards' flagship, and won the day for Jervis. At Tenerife, in 1797, he lost his right arm in a night attack, and in the famous battle of the Nile, in which he annihilated France's naval power, and made Britannia mistress of the seas, he lost an eye.

But all his dazzling achievements are but the background to the great fight in Trafalgar Bay, when, under full sail, on a long swell settling in from the Bay of Biscay, Nelson led the van of the English fleet to glorious triumph. Many a flag flew from the Victory, no colors showed on the enemy's masts. The well formed line of French three-deckers might well have aved the admiration of British sailors only admired the beauty and splendour of the spectacle, remarking "what a fine sight yonder ships will make at Spithead." And before the day was over, twenty of Villeneuve's ships had struck.

Before the battle began, Nelson, who had a certain premonition of death, had written the following: "May the great God whom I worship grant to my country, a great and glorious victory, and may no misconduct in anyone tarnish it, and may humanity after victory be the predominant feature of the British fleet." With cool courage the Victory endured for hours the fire from the "San-tissima" maintaining a single gun. At length she ran down the Redoubtable, whose tops, like all those of the enemy's ships, were filled with riflemen. Nelson never placed mastery in his tops, considering it murderous warfare, and useless to decide the fate of a general engagement. Curiously, a ball from the enemy's mizzen struck the admiral who scorned to be anywhere but in the hottest of the battle, and he fell, shot through the back, and mortally wounded. Carried to the cockpit, already filled with wounded and dying, his one thought was of his country and of "those under him, and the life spark stayed till Hardy told him victory was with the English."

A grateful nation lavished honors on his memory, and the leaden coffin in which he was brought home was cut in pieces, and distributed as relics of Saint Nelson, as the Victory's gunners called him. But greatest of all his monuments is the signal crystallizing the force which moves the true sons and daughters of that "Greater Britain" which "the waves of well nigh all the world." England expects every man to do his duty.

Eames will sing twice in the state and will then start on a concert tour which will take her as far as San Francisco. After January 1st she will be heard at nine performances at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York.

United States Fire Loss.

Rhode Island Standard.
"We burn up three theatres, three public halls, twelve churches, ten schools, two hospitals, two asylums, two colleges, six apartment houses, three department stores, two jails, twenty-six hotels, one hundred and forty flat houses, and nearly 1,000 homes every week of the year." It is the statement of the International Society of State and Municipal Building Commissioners and inspectors. We do more than this. By burning to death eighteen people every day in the year speaking in averages. Almost as many people meet death in fires in this country as in railroad wrecks and accidents. We have burned up more than a thousand million dollars' worth of property in six years; and for this loss the output of all our iron mines would just suffice to pay; our total gold output would pay for about one-third of it. Our loss gains upon us."
