Candid Statement Of Fact.

Prof. Shortt, of Kingston, has writoh Chamberlain with Bryan of the er craze, and represents that the pers would show that, although of discussion at this moment, it is mandate from the people to that elvery much alive .- The Mail.

This short and curt article does great injustice to the professor o political economy in Queen's College. tical study of current events, and like Goldwin Smith, when he has reached a conclusion deliberately, he proceeds to state it independently, courageousand clearly.

The article in which Professor Shortt | the morning, and they feasted deals with Chamberlainism, as it was as it appeared in the Queen's. Quarterly, was a terse summing un of the origin, development and pres ent status of a movement which has had its day, and is, in the estima tion of most thoughtful men, already assuming a funeral aspect. The state ment is simple and direct. Thus, respecting its genesis :

Chamberlainism was founded upon a pessimistic scare as to the impending ruin of British trade, domestic and foreign, together with the speedy and inevitable dissolution of the Brit ism empire unless a radical change in solicy was adopted. Over against this dismal picture of the future was set a correspondingly bright and millennial vision of what was equally inevitable should Mr. Chamberlain's designs for the amelioration of the empire be copted, and a mandate issued placing he establishment in his bands. plans were so simple and yet so effective that people of even the most mo dest intellectual attainments could readily comprehend the mmense benefits which it was intended they should

The reference to Bryan was incident al and to the effect that he, and mer like him, may for a time dazzle th people with their sophistry, but that in time, as the people go into an ar alysis of the facts, the schemes follow each other into "the land of explod-

Professor Shortt does not make nerry over Mr. Chamberlain's failure. It has made the people more thoughtful he says, more studious, with the James' idea, and he will be rememresult that they understand their fiscal position much better than they did. "Above all," writes | Professor Shortt, "the clearing of the imperial atmosphere of a great deal of section al self-seeking, much of it under var ons hypocritical masks, must make for a franker and more wholesome and therefore, more permanent understanding, which will meet every need as it arises in a practical and accommodating spirit. Primarily, the self dependence and self-control of each of the Anglo-Saxon sections of the em pire must remain the essential basis of a frank, self-respecting friendship and mutual assistance.

Is there anything insulting in that? Is it not a candid tatement of great economic fact from one whose desire is to give the truth without fear and without prejudice?

Feelings Of The People.

An excuse is offered for not consulting the people with regard to the gas and electric plant extensions, and it is one which must be regarded as absurd by all who understand the situation. It is said that there

The council of this year had before it a by-law which was given one reading by the council of 1904, and which, later, it was expected would some form, original or amended, be passed by the council and voted upon by the people. But the Light. Heat and Power committee dallied with this by-law, and eventually abandoned it. There was in the mean time a proper row with regard to the bills, especially for electricity, and this row had its effect upon the committee, Public sentiment, too, was assuredly not running in favour of municipal management, and there was no apparent desire to invite an expression of it at the polls. Truth to tell this public discontent stood in the way of ah appeal to the people more than anything else. Nothing could be done about the extensions, of gas at any rate, until the spring months arrived, and from until the work actually began there was the opportunity to submit half a dozen by laws had the Light, Heat and Power committee been anxious for State security is all right so long s it is safe. But the Pittsburg Bank experience is enlightening. Nearly $700,000 of the $800,000 of state deposits are out, "on paper of state politicians." What does that suggest ? High financing among the government officials?
