It is the duty of some one to see that the officials in the public buildings are employed, and the statement that one was found wandering about, without duty, is a reflection upon the system that prevails and upon the minister who is responsible for it.

The Tolls Should Go.

The conference of city and county representatives, on the toll question. did not amount to much. It could not be otherwise when there was not stop the headaches because any careful preparation for the meet they remove every trace of ing, and any definite proposition submitted for consideration.

The county roads, which are tolled, cost a certain amount. Or they stand for a certain investment, the profit ableness of which is indicated by the rental which is annually collected These roads, in order to be made free, must be bought by the county. What will this outlay be? How many thousands of dollars? To make them free for all time what will be the charge upon the general taxpayer? That is ten per cent a year, and at the same the only way in which the no tolls movement can be measured. Speculation, not based on mathematical calculations, is a useless thing.

When the county has ascertained what the freedom of the roads costs it will be in a position to make overtures to the city for an offset in the abolition of market tolls. The market fees annually amount to about $1,200. Capitalized that means a large sum, and the problem should be carefully worked out so that when the city and county committees meet they will be able to talk finances to

When the roads and the markets are made free there will be expenses still. The county must keep up the repairs on the roads, and the city must maintain its market, and both must take from general taxes the money which this service involves.

The plan is not whoily new, but it ponents cite with dignified but ill-concealed scorn that last year there was a sum of money expended in exploitation of the codfish. From this they gather that the cod is regarded as more important than the future citizen, and their hope is to correct the error. The cod, salt, or just enmesh ed, or finning his unthinking through his native habitat, may entitled to some consideration, yet the expansive yearning to uplift touches first the baby. Quite properly, too. It is undeniable that the government does not look specifically after the child and the home.
