EARL GREY AS ADVISER

DEVELOP NATIONALITY ON THE
HIGHEST POSSIBLE LINES.

Canadians Should Not Only Aim at High Ideals, But Should Inspire Others to Strive for Purity in Social and Political Life — Address Delivered in Winnipeg, But For Canadians Everywhere.

Probably no speech ever delivered in Winnipeg by a representative of the Crown produced a deeper impression than that which Earl Grey made here for the Canadian Club during his recent visit to that city. His theme was the uplifting of civic politics and the need for eradicating social as well as agricultural weeds. In the course of that speech His Excellency said:

"I am glad that I have been able to accept the invitation from your club.
I have accepted it because I am aware that the Canadian Club during his recent visit to that city. His theme was
that speech His Excellency said:

"I would remind you that the resolution action of a few fearless citizens in Chicago and other cities, has cleared the air of the weeds and graffers out of their City Councils, and that a few private citizens have been able to rouse a wave of civic enthusiasm which has swept corruption out of their own pockets and has, as well as the grass and flowers which adorn your streets.

Good Out of Chicago.
"I would remind you that the resolu-
in Chicago and other cities, has clear-
able to rouse a wave of civic enthu-
as the grass and flowers which
adorn your streets.

True Citizenship.
"When I see such a large assembly of gentlemen of the highest attainments have come here as members of a club which has been created to advance and promote the public well-being, not in the interests of any party, but of the State, I do not think I am wrong in assuming that they are animated by the same spirit which moved the ancient Romans in the brave days of old. At the same time, do not wish to pretend to take up the attitude that it is wrong to belong to any party. On the contrary, I remember that the laws, I think of Sparta, decreed that the men who refused to take any side of the other when a point of high principle, affecting the national well-being, was at stake, should receive the death penalty.

"Well, having been a party politician myself, and a very keen one when great issues were at stake, I confess I have some sort of sympathy with the spirit which inspired that rather drastic law. But I confess I have still great and sympathetic with one of the greatest Canadian statesmen of the Dominion, the Nova Scotia, Joseph Howe, when he said, he hoped that might live see the day when the question asked of every politician would be not "to which party do you belong?" but "what great public improvement do you mean to advocate, to which great public measure, tending to advance the public welfare of the people, are you pledged?"

Few Things Impossible.
"Now, Mr. Chairman, if this Canadian Club is in favor, and resolutely and earnestly in favor, of the application of any great moral principle to the conduct of public affairs, such as keeping away from corruption and interest out of the public service, then I say these Canadian Clubs of Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa can do it. It is a favorite belief of mine, which has been confirmed by experience more and more every day, that there are few things which are impossible, if one is constantly foremost in his mind, and if he really earnestly, I heard a most encouraging and inspiring sentence from Dr.
Herridge, the great Presbyterian preacher in Ottawa, who said: "In the region of heroism there is no nobility and no limit to the ultimate horizon of a sworn purpose."

"If you study the lives of such men as Father Damien, Charles Gordon Cecil Rhodes, General Booth and Dr.
Bernardo—all men practically of my own generation, you will realize that there is a divine power in each of you, which, if you will only let it grow, will enable you to remove mountains.

Dr. Bernardo.
"I cannot mention Dr. Bernardo's name without giving expression to the grief which has caused Canada to stand as one of the chief mourners by the grave side of one of the greatest benefactors either Canada or England ever had. A Spaniard by birth, a British citizen by adoption, Dr. Barnardo, by the strength of the Divine power which worked within him, was able, absolutely single-handed, and without any advantages to help him, to carve a way into the region of practical benevolence, and to find a haven in Canada for thousands of friendless children who, but for his helping hand, would, instead of becoming good citizens of the Dominion, have been swept by the force of circumstances for which they had no responsibility whatever, over the morral falls of Niagara.

"I hope Winnipeg may one day be able to give artistic expression to the lessons to be learned from Dr. Barnardo's life, and I say that because I believe there is no part of the world which has benefited so much from his benevolence as has the Province of Manitoba.

Officers Must Qualify.
Militia orders announce that commanding officers are required to call upon all provisional officers who have not qualified to state their reasons why their names should not be removed from the list of officers of the active militia. No recommendations for the removal of an officer from the militia will be accepted unless it is shown that he had been notified of the proposed action, and had been called upon to show why the removal should not take place.

NELSON, MAN AND HERO

WORLD HAS HELD NO RIVALS
FOR HIM AND SHAKESPEARE.

Collingwood's Tribute as True To-day
As It Was a Hundred Years Ago—A Lover of Old England—His Deathbed—"Kiss Me, Hardy"—Nelson's Religion in Private Diary—His Last Prayer to His Country.

"There was only one Nelson," said Collingwood when his chief lay dead in the cockpit after Trafalgar, and the hundred years that have elapsed since then have only served to justify the tribute of one great seaman to the greatest seaman the world has ever known. In the recent Empire-wide celebrations of his centenary this idea was well exemplified in them all. England has had her heroes of peace and war; to the history of the world she has contributed hundreds of famous names.
But other countries have their great men, too, and for every great Englishman but two, France or Germany or Spain or Italy or Greece might match a favorite son. For Shakespeare and for Nelson the world has held no rivals, and such was their greatness that whatever the future holds in store, that glory can never be eclipsed. Nelson's genius cannot be exaggerated.

Nelson, the Lover of England.
Comparisons between Napoleon and Wellington are frequently made to the disadvantage of the latter; but there is one comparison between Nelson and the French hero that we desire to consider. Leaving aside the question of their relative abilities as men of war, why did they fight? In the French army there was no soldier whose love of France did not equal Napoleon's, the great general fought for his own glory and his own power. His country was merely the instrument of his ambitions. Glance now at a letter Nelson wrote to Collingwood:

"We can, my dear Coll, have no little jealousies; we have only one great object in view, that of annihilating our enemies, and getting a glorious victory for our country. No man has more confidence in another than I have in you. We are one, and I hope ever shall be.

On His Deathbed.
After the terrible night at Tenerife, when he lost his right arm, he wrote his chief, Admiral Sir John Jervis: "I am become a burden to my friends, and useless to my country. I become dead to the world, I go hence and am no more seen. I hope you will be able to give me a frigate to convey the remains of my carcass to England. God bless you my dear Sir." But before the ink was dry he began to recover from the awful depression of a supposed last life.

On His Deathbed.
These extracts show Nelson to have put love of country before every other disease. In his dying hours his intense patriotism shone forth, and with it a gleam of that staunch religious faith that was so strong a characteristic.
After he had been carried below, and was lying on his back, he refused to allow the surgeons to attend him, but bade them bind up the wounds of his suffering soldiers. "For to me," he said, "you can do nothing. There I lay, fangling myself and assuaging a fiery thirst with lemonade, and at every cheer of his crew on deck a smile flushed over his face. There is nothing in literature more moving than the simple account of his death. Capt.
Hardy, came down to the old hero as he lay—breathing his last. He roused himself to ask:

"How goes the day with us?"
"Very well," replied Hardy; "ten ships have struck, but five of the van have tacked, and are coming down upon the Victory; but I have called two or three fresh ships round, and have no doubt we shall give them a drubbing."
"Good," said Nelson, "none of our ships have struck?"
"None," replied Hardy; "I am glad to hear that."
"Is there no fear of that," replied Hardy?
"Is a dead man," then said Nelson; "I am going fast; it will be all over with me soon."

"Kiss me, Hardy." Hardy then went up to the deck, but returned in about 50 minutes, and, taking Nelson by the hand, congratulated him even in the arms of death, on his glorious victory; adding that fourteen or fifteen of the enemy were taken.

"That's well," replied Nelson; "but I bargained for twenty"; and then, in a stronger voice added, "Anchor, Hardy, anchor. Do you make the signal 'Kiss me, Hardy,' said he.

Hardy knelt down and kissed his chief.
"Now I am satisfied," said Nelson;
"Thank God, I have done my duty." His articulation now became difficult; but he was repeatedly heard to say, "Thank God, I have done my duty," and expired at 4:30 without a groan.

Nelson's Religion.
In his private diary of Oct. 5, with the enemy in sight and battle certain, Nelson wrote this passage:
"May the great God whom I worship grant to my country, and for the benefit of Europe in general, a great and glorious victory; and may no misconduct in anyone tarnish it; and may humanity after victory be the predominant feature of the British fleet. For myself, individually, I commit my life to Him who made me, and may His blessing light upon my endeavors for serving my country faithfully. To Him I resign myself and the just cause which is entrusted to me to defend."

His Last Prayer.
His last message to his country was a prayer that in the event of his death, Lady Hamilton and his daughter, Horatia, might be provided for.
This great man evinced, first, a sense of his dependence upon a higher power; secondly, a strong affection for his fellows; and, finally a patriotism that was superior to all other qualities. Thus it came that he was a hero.

University Not "Godless." Toronto is wont to be classed as a "godless university" by number of individuals who should know better. As a matter of fact, she is exceedingly sollicitous for the spiritual welfare of her children. Her connection with the theological colleges doubtless has done much to counteract the negative attitude which she is compelled to adopt towards questions of creed, but in various ways she contributes indirectly to the religious life of the undergraduates. Courses in religious knowledge, Bible training and Church history have recently been added to the curriculum, and students have the option of taking these at the college of their own denominations. Another method which has been followed with eminent success is the delivering of university sermons. Famous preachers who are in a special manner adapted to an audience of university men are secured at frequent intervals. Last Sunday Rev. Prof. Kilpatrick of Knox College addressed the students in Wy-cliffe Convocation Hall. On Nov. 5 Rev. Dr. Cuthbert, of Kingston, Bishop of Ontario, will be the speaker.

What Flour Granulation Means in Bread-Making

Flour is composed of myriads of tiny granules.
To make good bread these granules must be uniform in size.
In poorly milled flour some granules are large, some small.
The small ones absorb yeast, "rise" and "ripen" before the large ones—the result is bread of coarse, poor texture.
The large granules are not developed into "sponge," they bake into heavy hard particles, spoil the texture of the bread and make it harder to digest.

ROYAL HOUSEHOLD FLOUR is perfectly milled—all the flour granules are uniform in size—the sponge rises uniformly—the bread is even in texture—perfect in flavor—good-looking, appetising bread—easily digested.
Ogilvie's back it with their reputation by branding it Ogilvie's Royal Household Flour.

"HECLA" FURNACE.

No Gas—No Smoke—No Dust in the
"HECLA" FURNACE.
As the mercury in a thermometer expands with heat and contracts with cold, so does every other metal expand and contract but in different proportions. Steel and iron in a furnace expand and contract, but in different degrees. When the metals are joined by bolts and cement, the expansion and contractions gradually loosen the bolts and allows the cement to drop-out, and the openings left allow the dust and gas to escape to the rooms above.
In the HECLA, there are no bolts —no cement. The joints are made by fusing the steel and iron together at white heat—just as a blacksmith welds together the pieces of a horseshoe.
The HECLA FUSED JOINTS are indestructible—as tight after ten years use, as before the first was started.
Send us a rough plan of your house and we will give you an estimate of the cost of installing a HECLA FURNACE. No charge for this.
