This: Profits, under that system, come into possession of the insured, provided he lives until his policy matures, whether it be an endowment or a life Do all policy holders therefore, who survive the term selected by them, share in profits? We answer, YES, all may take the cash value of their profits. BUT if a man's health has failed, can he have his profits added? We answer in this case NO, and why? Well We MUST EMPHASIZE it, for this is THE IMPORTANT OBJECTION to Tontine Insurance, namely, that a number of companies insert a clause in their policy, IN VERY FINE PRINT, TOO, that if the insured wishes profits added to policy, he must furnish the Company with a certificate of good health. a Great Help in Many Instances-Some Exciting and Amusing Episodes in Getting Voters to the Poll.

The prospective candidate for another constituency was deeply in love. Suddenly the general election was announced. The distracted young man wrote his address to the electors and velopes. The young lady, to her perntelligible reference to political questtions. To the printer went the love letter, with a request that 10,000 working class constituency the wife of meetings addressed by her husband and sat on the platform knitting during the proceedings. It was by no means fancy work upon which she was engaged. She contrived that the audia half-knit sock of old-fashioned blue varn, intended, of course, for her husband. The homely electors were mightily pleased. Here was a candidate who was a real man of the people, attached to old customs and associations.

He got into parliament, but the rough blue socks he never wore! If votes are thus easily gained, they are also easily lost.
