THE NEED OF SELECTING A RIGHT CALLING.

Which of All the Avenues Open Shall the Ontario Farm Lad Choose ?-Undoubtedly That for Which He's Best Adapted.

can be bought for less than the cost of removing the timber with which they were originally covered and erect-Miss Mazy E. Pratt, Elyth, Ont., ing the buildings that now stand upon them. If he wishes to wander darther afield the prairies offer him a homestead which he can have free on application. In the cities and towns employment awaits those who choose to enter factories or workshops. In New Ontario and the far west opportunities in mining are offered those to whom life of that kind offers attractions. In the operations and construction of railways, and in activities connected with the harnessing of our water powers the field is broadening more rapidly than in almost any other direction. In the professions, and in the carrying on of great financial institutions there is room for a few.

Which of all the avenues open shall the lad choose? One general answer will apply to the case of each one who puts the question to himself let him ind out if possible what he is best adapted for by nature and then bend ell his energies to fit himself for that call-

Considerations will, however, arise as to which of the several avenues open offer the best opportunity for mak ing the most out of life. When this point is reached, some lads are apt to be misled by the glamor of the city and the stories, frequently exaggerated, of the success attained by those of whom they have heard in the great centres of population; others may be led into error by what is told of the wealth which is being amassed in the great wheat farms of the west. Let us content ourselves at present

life in Ontario. The wages of operatives in factories, or the salaries of men in other positions, look large to the boy on the farm. But out of these carnings payment must be made in cash for a thousand and one things which are not valued at all on the farm, because they come as part of the conditions of living on the soil. Furthermore, the large earnings in cities are paid to men still in their prime, when noon-day passes incomes shrink faster than new-mown hav in the summer sun. On the farm, while the income may not be large, it is continuous; there is, almost from infancy to old age, the power to earn living expenses at least, and there are no long periods of enforced idleness, such as frequently occur in all cities. Moreover, the man who stands on his own broad acres need call no man master, and any lad, even if starting with nothing, may own his farm debt free by time he is forty-five; in an ordinary position in a city he would at that age begin to feel his earning power on the wane and outlook for the future darkening.

Perhaps in no other way are country lads so often misled in estimating the comparative advantages of different callings as they are by the stories told of the fortunes acquired by those whose name are seen almost daily in for the last quarter century, owing to the newspapers. It is doubtful if any real happiness comes with the bread that is stolen from others. Besides, fortunes which come easy—usually go in the same way. Seventeen years ago there were some forty members in the city council of Toronto, and over half of them were reputed to be worth any where from $50,000 to a quarter of a million, mostly made out of land speculation. Of the entire number so classed there is not more than one well-off to-day: of the rest some died in poverty, and one or two were driven into exile as a result of the exposures connected with the street rail-

Much less would be eager to belp others to relief. speak so highly of one as he does of Psychine if it had not proved its value and surpassed any other remedy in its wonderful power of healing and curing throat troubles

Mr. Bennett got acquainted with Psychine in this way. He was engaged to sing twice a day a Massey Hall for a week last winter. In the middle of the week his throat, got raw and sore, and he became so hoarse he could not sing without painful effort, and couldn't speak above a whisper. He confided to a friend that he could not sing any more, and would have to cancel his engagement for the rest of the week. His friend told him to try Psychine. He did. The result was his throat felt well enough to get him through that evening's performance. From that time his throat healed up and his voice cleared, and he was soon in first-class condition without losing an hour from his professional work. Harry Bennett was so grateful for what Psychine had done for him that he sent the accompanying testimonial, with the statement that he was willing the proprietors of Psychine should use his name whenever they chose, and that he would always be glad to recommend the remarkable remedy. Such cases are frequent with Psychine, but as Harry Bennett is so well known as an entertainer and as a thoroughly reliable gentleman, his voluntary testimonial will carry conviction to many who are suffering with throat or lung trouble, or who are struggling against stubborn colds. If they follow up Harry Bennett's experience and advice, they will try Psychine. It cures where others
