THE NEW PRESIDENT. Differs From Others France's Chiefs.

M. FALLIERES.

France's new president, M. Fallieres, differs from all predecessors in office in that he does not smoke. President Loubet loves his pipe, as did

Carnot, who distinguished himself to the chief magistracy, by discharge wardly at one of the official shooting parties at Rambouillet, that a considerable portion of the charge struck Gen. Brugere in the lower part of the back. Brugere, who was a colonel the time, and had been one of the members of the military household of President Grevy, was slated to leave the Elysee, and to return to regimental duty. But President Carnot was so distressed by the results of his carelessness, and so much concerned at the painful injuries sustained by Bru- and $5. gere, that he not only kept him on as a member of his military staff, but did everything he could to make amends by securing that officer's rapid

To-day Brugere, a capable, and po pular officer, and a great admirer of America, which he has visited on several occasions, notably when the statue of Rochambeau was inaugurated at Washington, holds worthily the position of generalissimo of the French army. of President Sadi-Carnot, President Fallieres is deeply attach ed to his umbrella, which accompan ies him on all and every occasion, and which will from now on become a favorite subject for French political caricaturists. The only other ruler who has ever been given to umbrellas was King Louis Philippe, who was rarely seen without one, and in whose hands it took the place of both sceptre and Cash and One Price of sword. Yet in spite of this analogy of tastes, it was Fallieres who as pre mier was responsible for the expulsion from France of King Louis Philippe' grandson, the late Count of Paris, and of the Duke of Orleans.
