THE POET AND DRAMATIST SPEAKS FOR HIMSELF.

Een Greet and His Company Prove That Elaborate Scenery is a Needless Accessory to the

The master as he wrote, and the master as he staged his dramas, were vividly portrayed at Grant Hall, Wednesday afternoon and evening, by Ben Greet and his company. No star parts, next to no stage effects, no tootlights, none of the accessories of the modern stage, and yet, a living Shakespeare drew many of his actors performance, which was not a play, but a reality to those who saw and THE DISTRICT POSTMASTERS heard.

Of more heart interest, perhaps be cause more in touch with our modern spirit. "The Merchant of Venice, was enjoyed, more than the bloody tras gedy of "Macbeth." In the former, Mr. Greet's conception of Shylock, the Jew, is most unusual-a fat man, ruddy of countenance, and with red hair and beard-his appearance calculated to augment the aerision which his usuries would create, a likely man to bewail, in ludicrous confusion, his "daughter and his ducats," and yet again rising strong above his pettiness, to rage in fury over the sorrows and humiliations of his race. Portia shared the honors in the act ing with Nerissa; her maid, both play ing most delightfully over their tapestry, and the latter doing some capital teasing and making up in the nonsense over the rings, Bassanio's playing of the casket scene was capital, his conception of the part clearly being that from the first the true lover, would know instinctively the shrine wherein the portrait of his true love lay, as he never glanced at the other two. Launcelot, the clown, too, brought the laughter he was meant to. If star parts were allowed there is no masters, held on Wednesday afterdoubt but Gratiano would get one, noon, in the parlors of the Iroquois From the moment he came on the hotel, was well attended, despite the stage with his rollicking friends in unfavorable weather conditions.
