LITERARY NOTES.

What is Said About Current Magazine.

"Gotham in Golden Chains" is a remarkable article by John Coulter in the National Magazine for April. He shows how the Ryan-Belmont-Rothschild-Morgan gang has got New York city by the throat, with a plan to float a street railway combine with a capital—mostly water—second in size to that of the United States Steel company.

Watson's Magazine, New York, exponent of Jeffersonian Democracy, is edited by Hon. Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia, the father of rural free delivery; People's Party nominee for vice-president in 1896, and for president in 1904. He is heading a middle-class reform movement and believes in public or government ownership of railroads, telegraphs and telephones; in municipal ownership of street railways, gas, electric lights, water works, etc., and in private ownership of all industries not natural monopolies.

The automobile has found a permanent place in modern fiction, but no better motor car story has been written than "The Pink Typhoon," by Harrison Robertson, which opens April Smart Set. It concerns itself with the adventures of a dignified judge in a middle-west town, and two charming children play important parts. The essay by Gelett Burgess, "The Sulphitic Theory," has innocent fun with commonplace people, who are constantly making commonplace remarks.

"What a Young Man Ought to Know," Vir Publishing Co., Philadelphia, Pa., is the revised edition of a book of 193 pages, claiming that information concerning the origin of life should reach the child through its parents. Realizing how few parents know how to present this delicate subject in a proper manner, the author sets the subject in such form that parents may present the thought in their own language, or place the book in the hands of the growing boy.

Penalty Of Blood Poverty.

Blood is the life. Life sets its crimson signal in the face. If you lack the ruddy hue of health you lack life; you are inviting disease. If the face is pale, if the hands and feet are continually cold, or there is any other sign of deficient circulation use Wade's Iron Tonic Pills.

Goats Thrive On Brush.

Warrensburg (Mo.) Journal.

A big load of Angora goats were unloaded at Warrensburg a few days ago and attracted considerable attention. They were consigned to Thomas Matthews, of Columbus neighborhood. The goats will be placed in pastures where there is a preponderance of brush, a goat's favorite food. The owners say they find that a big bunch of goats will do a better job of cleaning up a brush patch than an axe will do, and they will still have the goats, bigger and fatter than ever.

South American Rheumatic Cure

Why, its very nature makes it the most natural and easy cure that human intuition and diligence have discovered. Its wonderful power is in its simplicity; its effectiveness is in its going right to the seat of the trouble, dispelling the causes that "bode evil," give pain, stiffen joints, distort limbs, twist muscles, and when it reaches vital spots, ofttimes cause death. South American Rheumatic Cure is as harmless as milk. One of its marvels is the rapidity with which it effects a cure and the testimony of the thousands who have "thrown away their crutches" and climbed from the valley of suffering to the mountain top of health would fill a book.

THE TRIBUTE

Paid By M. S. Burnette To The Late Dean.

ADMIRED GREATLY

HIS CHARACTER AND HIS ATTAINMENTS.

His Knowledge of the New Testament Profound — A Scholarly Man, Seeing the Poetic Under the Common Place.

Lanark County, Ont. March 25.—(To the Editor): It was on a bright and beautiful Sabbath morning, in the month of July, nearly a score of years ago, that I first set foot upon Canadian soil, on the streets of the old historic city of Kingston. Journeying leisurely along, I came to an imposing stone edifice, and entering, bound my way quietly to a southern gallery—standing in an elevated pulpit, before a large and fashionable congregation, stood a man of middle age and medium build, clad in the garb of an Anglican clergyman. He had a bearded face, a strong nose, indicative at once of strength and character, and small, deep-set, clear and penetrating dark eyes. His voice, although especially fine in some parts of the ritual, was not of very great compass in sermonizing, and his articulation to a stranger at times, not very distinct, but he was speaking fluently and forcibly without notes. His style and bearing was more that of a lawyer arguing a nice legal question before a bench of judges, than that of a minister preaching from a pulpit.

I had been reared in the so-called evangelical churches, and knew nothing, absolutely of Anglican doctrine or polity. I had supposed that western christendom was roughly divided into the two great divisions, Roman Catholic and Protestant; and that the Protestant branches were substantially agreed in all respects. Every word and every proposition enunciated by the speaker was directly to the contrary, and naturally excited my interest, my surprise, my astonishment. The theme of the discourse was "Nicodemus and the new Birth." I left the service with the determination to examine the tenets of that particular church, with the result, that several years thereafter, I became united with that body, and curiously enough with that identical organization—for the speaker was the late Dean Smith, and the edifice was old St. George's cathedral.

As a close and regular attendant upon the cathedral for more than a dozen years it might be expected that I have had opportunities for observing the salient qualities of this distinguished priest and, with your permission, I desire to set them briefly forth.

In no respect was Dean Smith a great preacher, in the common acceptation of that term, but in every respect he was a great teacher. He had neither the imagination, voice or elocution that fit men for fine efforts of platform oratory; but he possessed the mathematical faculty, and the concrete power of adaptation so necessary to the teaching profession. He was seen at his best at the head of a Bible class, and in his Lenten exhortations. His knowledge of the New Testament was profound, the fruit of much study and serious thought. Always interesting and instructive in his pulpit, he was especially so when concerned with matters of church doctrine and faith. One of the best discourses that I ever listened to, he delivered on "Self Examination," during the Lenten season many years ago. In his death the Canadian church has lost one of her best and one of her greatest teachers.

The next intellectual quality to which I would direct attention, was the remarkable executive ability displayed by the late dean upon all occasions. Twenty years ago, if we are to credit reports, the affairs of the cathedral were much perturbed. It is likely that the late Archbishop Lewis looked the ground over quite carefully before he called a man to the rectorate of the Kingston parish. In Rector and Canon Smith he found a man dignified, sane, firm, quiet, well educated, laborious, pious and self-balanced beyond most candidates. It was indeed a steady hand that was required to safely guide the rocking ship of the church. The first new cathedral was the monument to the executive ability of the dean, as likewise is the second, a structure, which for noble proportions, and superb adornments is the pride of Kingston and the province.

For more than a half score years it was my privilege to attend upon the annual session of the Ontario synod, always an interesting body to me, and there the dean was ever a personage of interest. After the fashion of the synod, he was seated on the platform, together with the presiding bishop, the chancellor and the two archdeacons. During all this time I remember that the late dean seldom took part in the discussions, sometimes exciting and vehement, not, surely, for any want of ability or interest, but because it was the nature of the man to practice self-effacement. A more retired or humble participator it would be hard to find.

It must ever stand as a very particular compliment to the abilities and character of the deceased, that a majority of the clergy of the diocese presented his name, as the successor of the late Archbishop Lewis.

During my long attendance upon his ministrations, I never heard him quote a line of poetry or attempt a single rhetorical period, although his language was chaste and scholarly. Certainly this is both unique and remarkable, and to the casual observer, might indicate the absence of the poetic and imaginative elements in his mental make up. But nothing could be further from the truth. I have seldom met a person, who in private conversation, exhibited finer traces of the possession of a luxuriant imagination and a picturesque and fervid poetic fancy. The mind of Dean Smith possessed that rare and extraordinary power of discerning the poetry that underlies the every day and common affairs of life and time. One instance of this was his attitude upon the great question of church union, of which we hear much these days. But the idea of the dean upon this question, as often set forth to the writer, was not merely a union of the Protestant bodies, but a union of christendom. He often argued privately, that the Anglican church was to be the meeting ground of the various christian sects, as a body equally removed from Roman Catholicism on the one hand and Methodism on the other. How far in all this the dean was a prophet, the womb of time shall alone disclose. This attitude of the dean accounts for the fact that throughout his ministry, he was never known in any public utterance, to speak a word that could be construed into an attack upon any other religious society, or even a criticism of the same.

If I were asked to name the greatest quality of the departed, as presented to my apprehension, it would be this,—absolute and entire self-control. I believe this quality is the greatest, because the rarest endowment of man. Appetite, dignity, pride, ambition, power, avarice, exertion, pleasure, each in turn, was his servant, none his master. With this wonderful equipoise, it could be easily imagined that he would have adorned any station, civic or religious, however exalted. The blandishments of plutocracy, the shafts of calumny, the threats of enemies, the subtleties of advocates, the impassioned appeals of orators, and the earnest solicitations of friends would, all alike, have fallen harmlessly at his feet, if intended to swerve him a hair's breadth from what he esteemed his simple duty. Of his official relations, it is neither within my power, nor province to speak, as I never held any such with him or his church, and write only from the ranks of the parishioner. Other and abler pens than mine will trace his connection with his diocese, his province, and his dominion.

In many, if not in all respects, it could be safely said that the late Dean of Ontario led a charmed life. Well equipped in the matter of education, honored above the most of his fellowmen in official preferment, blessed with good health, and beyond and over all, with an immediate family circle unbroken, he was, as respects the "stern realities of life," as the babe unborn. But the great law of compensation must always and everywhere be enforced, and so it was decreed that he should be cut down suddenly in the plentitude of his powers and of his usefulness. But the favoring stars of his destiny, it should seem, were even present here, for the bolt that descended from the overcast wintry skies, which laid him low in dissolution, was to fall while standing in earnest exhortation before his Lenten congregation, as though to add another feature to his ecclesiastical renown.

And so have I written long and tenderly of my beloved spiritual adviser, and yet I linger and hesitate to resign the page, and why is this? Alas! The reasons are not far to seek.

The labors of clergymen are often wearing and onerous, and many times I doubt not, they think them sadly unrequited. But the human heart, at best, is frail and weak, and in times of stress and tension looks about for succour. When a man stands by his desolate family hearth, with companion and children laid still and cold in death, he turns instinctively to his spiritual adviser, and then it is that the faithful ambassador pours the balm of consolation into the bruised and broken spirit, for which act the man of God by no means goes forth unappreciated or unlaurelled.

With a deep, strong, serious nature; a voice, at close range, unusually rich and melodious; a speaking eye of darkest hue; and of infinite tact and tenderness, the Very Rev. Buxton B. Smith stepped lightly to the side of his stricken parishioner, as an angelic presence and inspiration, to smooth away the asperities of death. Severe illness in my family has prevented me, for nearly two years, from looking into his face; and it would have afforded me the greatest possible delight to have gazed once more upon that familiar form, even if it were wrapped in the habiliments of the tomb.

To the sorely bereaved family we tender the terms of a condolence, born of a like affliction and long continued sorrow.

You have left, my sisters, the consolations of a husband's and a father's faith, whose efficacy the slowly-moving ages have not shaken, and the sacred fires of which neither time nor change can quench; and you have furthermore left, and this should be a great comfort to you in this dark day of death and desolation, the priceless heritage of an illustrious and a stainless name.

May a good Providence vouchsafe to you, an all-sustaining grace.

The majestic church of which the fallen was so conspicuous and zealous an adherent, has borne the remains to their last resting place, with every pomp and circumstance of her stately and solemnly resounding ritual.

He sleeps well!!

In the words of the great English poet and peer, Lord Byron, death was to this man but as a post-house in the midheavens, where "threading each shining planet's heavenly course" he halted for a moment to cast aside those earthly cerements, to be clothed anew with garments of immortal beauty, on his way to his Risen Lord!

The Lenten season, with its characteristic gloom and melancholy, is following along the heavy road to Calvary and the cross; and the incoming glorious Eastertide will not break with its accustomed splendor and joyousness upon the old cathedral walls; but this we know, that joined unto that bannered heavenly host, flashing in their full array, he is now singing, and shall forever sing, the glad eternal Easter song!

And so farewell! my friend and pastor, a long, a last farewell!!—MORRIS S. BURNETTE.

Another Wonderful Case

Here Is Something That Will Be Welcome News to Many a Discouraged One.

William H. Reed.

"For several years I have been troubled with gas around my heart, shortness of breath, in fact, if I walked my usual gait my breath would get so short I would be compelled to make several stops during my walk.

"Of late my food did not digest properly. It turned sour in my stomach, caused me great distress; often, too, I had disagreeable attacks of belching gas and heartburn.

"I was bothered with severe pains across the small of my back and the least bending or turning would cause me to almost cry out.

"I was induced to try Dr. Leonhardt's Anti-Pill and from the very first found relief.

"For the last three months I have had no recurrence of my former complaints, so I am bound to say Anti-Pill has indeed cured me."

This is the voluntary statement of William H. Reed, of 165 Queen street, Kingston, Ont.

The remedy that cured such an extreme case is surely worth trying. 506

The Secret Of Content.

Roy Farrell Greene in Leslie's Weekly.

It isn't what a fellow has that clothes him with content,
That puts him in that frame of mind
Where joy and peace are blent
And makes him feel that recompens'd are those who plan and strive;
That he's, in truth, well satisfied, and
glad that he's alive.
It isn't money stored in banks, there
placed to his account,
It isn't mortgages he holds, of fabulous
amount;
Nay, some of these sheathe worry's thorns
as down life's path we jaunt—
It isn't what a fellow has, but what he
doesn't want!

Though wandering feet may be a curse,
far more are itching hands
That grasp, but never satisfy, their cravings and demands.
Though rolling stones accumulate but
very little moss,
They don't, like avaricious palms, keep smarting at their loss.
And so, the man of modest means who keeps desire curbed Strolls side by side with happiness when others walk perturbed.
Possession ne'er makes man immune of
cares that siege or haunt.
It isn't what a fellow has, but what he
doesn't want!

If one's by wish and want imbued his days will all be spent
In futile spurts upon life's road to overtake content,
If one's desires modest be he'll find them
all supplied
And be a constant "Sunny Jim," with life well satisfied;
It isn't bonds that make for cheer, nor
stock that peace supplies.
It isn't silver pleasure brings, nor gold contentment buys.
It isn't bank or treasury notes, though
fistfuls you may flaunt—
It isn't what a fellow has, but what he
doesn't want!

It is thought that the game of whist was first played in the time of King Henry VII. of England.
