CAPTAIN DUNN OF THE CRUI

Something About the Doughty Commander of the Terror of American Poachers.

SER VIGILANT.

Windsor, Ont., April 10.-The Vigilint, the terror of poachers on the anadian waters, is moored at the Walkerville dock, but prepared to go into service, Only the presence of ice in the "dustless highways" prevented the Vigilant from beginning the interlaken patrol duties Sunday, as the department ordered the cruiser to be readiness on that date. Like the obedient tar that he is, Capt. Dunn had his craft in trim, but could not control the elements. He will, therefore, start next week, Capt. Edward Dunn, commander of the revenue cutter, has been associated since childhood with boats. He was born at Birmingham, England, and crossed the ocean with his parents when five years old. The family took up their residence at Owen Sound, on the Georgian Bay.

Here, with a small yacht, he amused himself on the water, laying the foundation for his future career. When but eighteen years old, in conjunction with his brother, he bought a tug which Edward commanded. The name of the boat was the "Okonra." This tug was engaged by Gen. Wolselev at the time of the Riel rebellion to tow a lighter to and from the transports, HREE TRYING which could not come close to the land on account of shallow water. This duty he performed well for five weeks. In addition to this he was well liked by the officers of the army who, on Sundays, when there was little to do, would get him to take the fish all day. At the end of his engagement he was given his regular pay and a handsome purse, the latter from

> After this the tug was engaged in the towing business, but got into crouble at Wyandotte by towing a ship in American waters. Papers were gotten out for Capt. Dunn's capture. but he received a tip from a friend and hurriedly left his moorings at a Detroit dock. Then the boat was turned into a passenger vessel and was used around Owen Sound till she was burn-

The year 1892 found Capt, Dunn without a steamer. Three boats were being built and he was promised the first. However, when it was ready for commission the smuggling of whiskey was becoming so prevalent that the vessel was turned over to the customs, The second boat had been promised to other captain, therefore Capt, Dunn had to wait for the third. That year he was on several sailing boats.

In 1893, the Petrel, well known to Windsorites, was put in commission. From 1893 to 1904 Capt, Dunn was in command of the Petrel. With the one small cannon and a fighting crew he kept the Yankee fishermen in terror In 1904 the trim little steamer Vigilant was turned over to Capt. Dunn. This cruiser is much faster and darger than the Petrel. It is also muck better

Silk Shirt-Waist Model.

Simple silken shirt waists, still obtain for wear with tailored costumes, regardless of the vogue of the lingerie waist. There are always times when the silk waist serves the purpose better than the lingerie, and for such occasions every one should be prepared. The illustration is for a misses' garment, but is equally well adaptable for the grown-up. The front's are tucked in clusters, three in each shoulder seam, close to the armseye, a small boxpleat with two tucks either side directly in the front, these stitched to yoke depth; the fullness over the bustline drawn in easily to the waistline. The back is plain, save for the broad made. The full bishop sleeve is unlin-Two important discoveries we have of the silk, while the collar is of the

Man Deserted, Later Returned and Confessed. Paris, April 10.-The trial of a sol dier belonging to the Colonial Infantry for desertion has revealed a new kind of anti-militarist propaganda. A number of anti-militarists succeeded in persuading the soldier that military life was unworthy of a free man. The young soldier, who at that time had a few regimental worries, was induced to desert. His uniform, and sword and bayonet, which was smashed, were placed in a dust bin, and he was given civil clothes and a sum of money, which had been subscribed on his behalf to enable him to proceed to

When he left the country, a letter, purporting to have been sent by him to his colonel, was published in the anarchist journals. The letter bristled with insults against the army. At Brussels the deserter received a warm welcome at the hands of a prominent anarchist. He was put in lucrative employment, but was not happy in hisfreedom, After a few months he regretted his act, returned to France, and surrendered himself in spite of the threats of his French and Belgian

The war council, which che Midi, considered that the real ly guilty persons were not before it. The repentant deserter was very leniently dealt with. A sentence of six months passed upon him was mitigated by the application of the loi de sursis, which means that he will not go to prison at all.

A New Haven despatch says: Yale met a team of former English university players this afternoon on the Yale field in the first English rugby football game ever played by an American varsity team. Neither side scored, Yale twice having the ball at the Englishmen's ten-yard line, only to lose it because of penalties incurred through ignorance of the game. The English players had never played together, and gave a very sorry exhibition of team play. They excelled Yale greatly in passing, but in line forcing, kicking and running Yale was far superior. The Dawson, Yukon, Daily News, of March 9th, has the following reference to Randy McLennan, formerly of Williamstown; and for several years a player of the Cornwall lacrosse club, and Cornwall hockey slub, also of the Queen's College rugby and hockey teams: "The most sensational conclusion to any curling contest in the north was that which marked the finish of the three days' tourney at the D.A.A.A. last evening for the Seagram cap The rink was crowded with fardent curlers, all eagerly craning their necks to see the big shots that told the tale. Randy McLennan's wonderful shots simply outdid the work of his opponents. McLennan was there when needed. He shot around the stones of the opposition, made curves that cut to the desired point to within the shade of an inch, bowled out the Martin stones, and landed in the desired haven. It was great, and the old stone twisters who looked on found their eyes standing on the outer surface of their heads in sheer amazement. McLennan started slow and ended at a swift pace. Martin was behind from the start.
