The argument against the single tax has been its inadaptibility to communities and conditions in which another system had long pre vailed. But here comes the proposal to try the plan of taxing land values in the boroughs of Scotland,

The bill provides for the separat valuation of the sites and buildings. and for the imposition of a tax not exceeding two shillings (fifty cents) in the pound upon the value of the land. It also provides for the taxation of realties which derive their value from the presence of the community, and as which should contribute their fair proportion to the taxation raised. The taxation of unoccupied land, so as to make it unprofitable for them to hold it till the industry of others adds to its value, has its advantage,

It was championed by the lord ad vocate of Scotland, who, taking up the legal aspect of it, held that it did injustice to no one. It was not only a local expediency but a social necessity. It would deal effectually with some men who were not partners the community, but parasites upon it. The popularity of the legislation was indicated by the manner in which passed the commons. The majority in its favor was 268. All the members the land or it would not have been rom Scotland, save seven, voted for

ADULTS MUST APPLY

The new seeds have arrived for the Civic Improvement Society. In order to secure the best results it has been decided to give them only to adults, who may register children's names. The Civic Improvement Society are anxious children should compete for the prizes for best flower beds, and for flowers raised from the seeds, but the committee felt that the most of children who clamored for seeds on Monday, would have little effect towards obtaining this result. There will be a number of ladies present at Dr. Chown's drug store, from four to six each day, this week, who hope to be able to meet the parents, older brothers and sisters, and give advice as to best seeds to plant in a given plot. If this plan of getting the parents interested in the children's flowers does not succeed, other plans will be tried.
