HALO HOW GENEVIEVE WARD WED: DED COUNT AT 16.

Brothers Kidnap Bride at Altar After Ceremony-Tragedienne Never Sees Nobleman After Second Wedding is Performed Orders of Russian

London, May 2.-The birthday of Genevieve Ward has brought to light again the halo of romance which surrounds her, but which few people know of. In reality, she is the Countess de Guerbel, and thereby hangs the story which would make the fortune of any novel.

Before she became an actress she was famous as a vocalist; it was only after her voice suddenly deserted her that she took to the dramatic stage. While she was studying music in Italy she met a Russian nobleman, Count Constantine de Guerbel. She was sixteen; he older, but still a young man of striking presence and winning manners. He proposed, and the girl's mother, thinking it a fine match, gave her consent. The marriage ceremony was performed in Paris in the presence of the American consul, but without other witnesses. The civil marriage was to be completed by the performance of the religious rites of the Greek church. But the count was fickle and base.

In order to make a rich marriage in Russia he repudiated his union with the young American girl. He had not counted on the courage and purpose of the latter. With her mother she went to St. Petersburg and, after overcoming almost insuperable difficulties, was granted an audience with the czar. He heard her story and issued a special ukase ordering the count to repeat the marriage cere-To the amazement of the count.

when the bride appeared in church she was led to the altar in mourning, with a long veil of black crape. Beside her stood her brothers, armed with loaded revolvers. At the door of the church was a carriage into which they led her the moment the ceremony was concluded. She never saw her husband again. And it was the Countess de Guerbel who, as "Gierabelle," thrilled the world with her m lody and as Miss Genevieve Ward who became famous as a tragedienne wherever the English language is
