REGULATIONS HAVE BEEN PREPARED.

And Are to Be Rigidly Enforced -Land Sharks Are to Be Put Out of Business-Will make Thorough Investigation.

The extraordinary influx of settlers nto the Northwest which has taken place during the last three years has a severe test and has demonstrated that they are not suitable to present condi scarcely any value. It did not matter land could be had for a mere song. Under such circumstances the homestead regulations were easily carried out and isted, and if such occurred it was speedwest lands commenced to be noised the first day of January, 1906. abroad, when the possibilities of successful farming began to be realized and when people started to come into the country at the rate of 200,000 a year. The price of land went up by leaps and bounds, numerous land companies were land was in great demand.

The history of the western lands bought from rallway companies were the alternate or odd-numbered were, under the law, reserved for the not deter some speculative land companies and individual speculators from securing even-numbered sections. They got bogus homestead entries made under the system which had been in vogue for years of allowing entries by proxy More than that, they secured the cancellation of genuine entries where the homesteader had failed to fulfill his obligations, or in some way or other had not complied with the law. With the adjoining even-numbered sections in his possession the speculator was able to boost the price of his lands. He bered section and then say to the prospective purchaser: "Now, if you will take this I will throw in the adjoining even-numbered section also." As the latter had been got for a merely nominal price the speculator could well afford to do so, and, of course, the intending settler would jump at the chance. In this way the former would be handsomely paid for the land which he had obtained legitimately and also for that which had come into his possession through fraud.

ODD FUNERAL CUSTOMS OF

ESKIMOS OF LABRADOR.

Christian Missionaries Husmor Them in the Practices -Ideas of the Pagans in the Labrador's dreary waste is peopled, generally speaking, by a few scattered tribes of Montagnais Indians, while its seaboard in the north is occupied by about 3,000 Eskimos. Each race has its peculiar burial customs, interesting if awesome. When a member of a comraunity dies the Eskimos carry the body to the top of the hill near their settlement and there lay it, in a sitting posture, on the surface of the hard, flinty ground. Heavy stones are piled about it in the form of a cairn, completely covering it so that the wolves and bears may be unable to disturb the body. The male is buried with his weapons of the chase and the female with her domestic implements. After years, when the action of summer suns and winter snows has broken down the mound of stones, it is not uncommon to other natives to help themselves to the stone lamps, flint and ivory arrow and lance heads and other articles of value to them which are found lying besides the bodies. But in every case some substitute, even if less valuable, is placed there instead of what has been It is the idea of the pagan Eskimos that, though the spirit of the dead per-

no longer needs the articles, the ghosts be propitiated by keeping up the num ber of articles originally placed in the grave, even if the material of these is departed from. The Moravian missionaries humor the natives whom they have Christianized by practicing this habit of substitution, and a favorable article to place in the graves is a rusty razor. Many years ago some admirer of the mission sent out an enormous quantity of razors in the belief that they were in general use. But the last thing one would contemplate doing on this coast in winter would be to use a razor. As no other use could be found for the razors, they have been devoted to this peculiar purpose, and so it is common to see in every Eskimo grave that has been opened an appliance which no old time Eskimo ever heard of. These curious customs are transmitted from people to people. The Montagnais Indians have a somewhat similar practice. They bury their dead in a box or coffin made out of bark, and in this are placed a loaded gun, a horn of powder, a bag of shot, a pouch of tobacco, a flint and steel for striking fire, an axe and a pair of snowshoes. The burial place is likewise a hilltop, as it is impossible to dig underground in Labrador for eight months of the year, and stopes are also used to cover the coffin. But they are so arranged that some can be removed after ten days, when the relatives return and take out these valuable articles. It is held that by that time the dead one has reached the happy hunting grounds and has no further use for them. But even they too, substitute wooden sticks for the gun, axe and snowshoes and skins for other articles.-Chicago News.

Northwest Rebellion Recalled A picture in The Manitoba Free Press of a bridge (2,300 feet long and 85 feet high) which the Grand Trunk Pacific has just completed over Pine Creek west of Portage la Prairie, Man., reminded a veteran of the Northwest rebellion of an incident which took place during the transport of troops westward in 1885. The Montreal Garrison Artillery (as it was then known) was the first regiment to make the all-rail trip to Winnipeg over the C. P. R. A Lover of Humanity.

The Countess of Aberdeen is a lover of humanity. When Lord Aberdeen was Governor-General of Canada, from 1893 to 1898, the countess was probably the most conspicuous and popular woman in Canada. She was born on the estate in Inverness-shire in 1857, and was married to Lord Aberdeen in 1877. In 1886 when Lord Aberdeen became Viceroy of Ireland she accompanied him to a post that required diplomacy and tact. It was at a time when the people were sullen and discontented, for the food supply had failed. The warmth' of that fady's presence and her work on their behalf soon won over the people, who were aided materially. She was directly responsible for a revival of the lace-making industry in Ireland, and ordered that all guests to the Castle at Dublin must wear Irish poplin. She organized the Women's Liberal Federation, which has a membership of 80,000. first lady of Ireland.
