GUILD FOUGHT HIM

ANDREW MACLEAN GAVE EVIDENCE AT HAMILTON.

"You Are Only One in Sixty," Said Sir George Drummond, When Appealed to—Some Lively Evidence.

Hamilton Times. After being detained from time to time since last March, the hearing of evidence in the conspiracy charges against officers of the Dominion Wholesale Grocers' Guild was resumed in Hamilton, to-day.

The first witness examined was Andrew MacLean, Kingston, a wholesale grocer, who was frequently referred to in the evidence, already put in as evidence. Mr. MacLean said he had been in business since 1851, and up until 1888, was able to buy sugar direct in lots as low as twenty-five barrels.

"In fact, I was able to buy everything direct up till that time." "How did the refusal come?" "From the Macdonald Tobacco company."

"I suppose you are going to bring Mr. Macdonald here," suggested Mr. Bristol.

"Oh, anything these conspirators say is all the same," remarked Mr. Washington.

The letter and Mr. Macdonald's signature which was produced by Crown Attorney Washington was identified by the witness. MacLean said he never bought anything until he had the money to pay for it, and in all his orders he had the manufacturers draw on demand, so that he could not have been refused for not paying promptly.

Meeting Manager Stewart, of the Macdonald company, in Montreal, he asked him why his orders had been refused.

"Because there has been so much annoyance from complaints," was the reply.

MacLean interviewed Mr. Macdonald himself, and was told that the matter would be decided that evening.

Manager Stewart called on him and told him to sell his tobacco at the same price as the others. He agreed to this and his orders were filled for two years, and then suddenly ceased.

Macdonald refused to get a satisfactory reply by letter from Sir George Drummond, he went to him personally.

"We have no complaint to make about you," said Sir George Drummond, "but we are selling to, however, there are only one. We must make money as well as you."

Manager Watson of the Canada company advised him to get the list and to get a portion of the goods, he then refused to do this.

"How much sugar were you able to buy?" "Anything from a car load to a train load."

"Did you ever try to become a member of the guild?" "Yes, and they cornered me. He said he would give the facts without telling the names of men, who might get into trouble. I was getting my sugar and tobacco from other sources," he continued.

They traced these men up and stopped them selling tobacco. I became hopeless and made application to the guild to become a member, but this was refused."

MacLean also related his troubles about getting rice. He said if the government would now slightly lower the duty on sugar and rice he thought all the dealers could get along nicely.

"What was the result of all this on your business?" "It kept me down. I am seventy-four years of age," said Mr. MacLean, "and still fighting to get a satisfactory result."

"Do you want to be a member of the guild, now?" asked the magistrate.

"No, it is on its last legs, I guess." Letters dated 1889, from the Goldstein Tobacco company, Montreal, were read. One of them told Mr. MacLean that if there was any change in the combine—thereby they could sell him goods, they would let him know within a day. MacLean had a similar experience with the Macdonald company of Montreal, when he tried to get tobacco from it. They said it was impossible to fill orders on account of the other Kingston dealers rising up against them if they did.

On September 10th, 1905, the Ontario Sugar company, of Berlin, refused to supply him when they found out the facts.

"You ask how this has affected my business," said the aged witness, "it has held me down. For sixty years I have worked like a slave and these men have kept me from the position I think I am justly entitled to."

Cross examined by Edmund Bristol, MacLean said his business was chiefly wholesale. There was an argument between the magistrate and counsel for the defence, when Mr. Bristol began to make enquiries about MacLean's retail business. The court could not see what was to be gained by taking up time going into that, but Mr. Bristol was persistent.

The letter written by Secretary Willis refusing MacLean admission to the guild, was identified by him when read over again, by Mr. Bristol. It stated that if he could prove he was a legitimate wholesaler, he would be admitted to the guild.

"I wrote back that if Willis would come within two miles of Kingston, I would go out to kick him. MacLean explained to Mr. Bristol that his real reason in going to see the referees this month was to see if they would relent. If they had he said the crown-attorney would have had sent a policeman to get him to come to Hamilton to testify.

Of the courteous manners of all Spaniards a traveller writes: "So anxious is every one to be of service to others that the stranger is apt to consider the Spaniards are inquisitive people. An experience in a Madrid tram-car was enlightening in this direction. A woman in getting into the car appeared to have slipped and hurt her foot. She and her husband began an animated discussion upon the incident, and of the dozen others in the car every one except ourselves craned forward to listen. The passengers were well assorted, ranging as they did from a captain in uniform to a woman almost of the beggar class. That one and all in turn joined in the discussion until exciting the least resentment, opinions being apparently welcomed. Gentlemen arising at their destinations ceased arguing, raised their hats and went out, leaving others in possession until the principals left.

"There is no hour of the day or night which a Spaniard deems inappropriate to practice" of smoking the same writer observes. "Whenever he finds time hanging heavily, which is frequently the case, he lights a cigarette, Time hangs heavily on a Spaniard's mind in the brief interval between the courses at lunch and dinner, whenever he wakes at night, when travelling between station and hotel in an omnibus, and always when in a railway train, regardless of ladies. The practice of smoking is so universal in Spain that railway compartments for non-smokers exist in theory only, and the habit combined with that of loud talking at all hours of the night and morning, makes the average Spaniard undesirable as a travelling companion, especially at night."

SENATOR COX Was Too Willy for George F. Shepley.

Toronto, June 1.—Senator Cox before his second day on the witness stand, in the insurance commission, and again proved his inability to withstand the examination of G. F. Shepley. His evidence was interesting, dealing with the connection between the great St. Lawrence street, in connection with a proposition that the town should have the terminal facilities of the company's lines in Northern Alberta. The town agreed to pay $50,000 in improvements in the town. The two bodies have just signed an agreement, and the seals and signatures were attached to the documents within a few days.

Messrs. Hays, general manager, Fitzhugh, Mr. McGoigan, and other officials of the G.T.R., returned, today, from an inspection of the line. They are optimistic over the prospects of the road being able to handle its share of the grain crop in 1907.

CHRISTENING OF CANADA. Due to a Historic Blunder by Portuguese.

The name Canada perpetuates a blunder. According to an eminent authority when the Portuguese explorer, Gaspar Cortereal, in 1500, first ascended the great St. Lawrence they believed it to be the strait of which they were in quest in a passage to the Indian sea. When, however, they arrived at the point where they could clearly ascertain that this was no strait, but a river, they exclaimed, "Canada" in their disappointment, "Canada" ("Here nothing.") These words, remembered by the natives were repeated to the next Europeans who visited the land. The newcomers, hearing the phrase so frequently used, conjectured that it must be the name of the country, so "Ca Nada" it remains.
