Baint-reducing gold .- Shakespeare. At present a golden thead of romantic interest is being spun like a shimmering spider web over Tobermory Bay, one of the loveliest inlets on the west coast of Scotland. This bay offers shelter to mariners and ishermen off the north-west corner of At that point a determined search is on for treasure which, it is believed, has lain quietly under the water more than three centuries. A halo of romance and tradition surrounds the gold, which is supposed to have gone down with the Admiral of Florence, or Florentia, the treasure ship of the Spanish Armada, in 1588. Legend has it that in September of that year a large Spanish galeon, the Florentia, in trying to avoid the storms and save the treasure on board until suitable weather made possible her escape southward, took refuge in the safe, land-docked bay Tobermory. According to reports, the Florentia had on board $15,000,000 in English money. The officers and men who were starving, demanded food from the McLeans, of Mull.

In return for supplies, after due neetiation, the admiral agreed to land 100 men to assist the McLean clan, of Scotland, which at that time was at sword's points with the McDonalds. He was also to pay the McLeans a large sum of money, as well, if they would assist him to repair his ship. This promise of money is taken to show the presence of a considerable quantity of specie on board, and, as the vessel was the flagship, it is probable that she carried the treasure of the entire Armada.

The 100 men were landed and assisted in defeating the McDonalds. They were afterward allowed to return to the ship, but the McLeans held three officers as hostages until the debt be the last seventy years no fewer than eighteen expeditions have set out to recover this pile of gold and jewels. Indeed, more than once, parties have engaged in deadly conflict. Search is in progress there at the present time. Cocos Island is a patch of land six-teen square miles in extent, rising from the Pacific ocean off the coast of Costa Rica, to which country it belongs. Two treasure plants are sup posed to be located there, one of $60, 000,000 and the other $15,000,000.
