Candidates Are Scarce

It is very remarkable, to say the east of it, that Mr. Bryan is regard ed by the democrats of the United States as the coming man for presidency. The people across the way begin their hunt for candidates early in the campaign. The last great contest only took place in 1904, and then Bryan was not considered eligible. He was the most conspicuous man in the St. Louis convention, but he had twice bitten the dust, and a third defeat was not desired. Judge Parker got the nomination and ran a losing race from the start. Roosevelt had a signal victory, and because he represented a radicalism that captivated

This popular steamer of the White Squadron looked better than ever before as she left her moorings with all flags unfurled to the breeze. The early hour of departure accounted for a few of the excursionists being a little behind time in arriving at the wharf, but with that courtesy and attention to the slightest wants of patrons of the line, which has always characterized the officials connected with the River St. Lawrence and Thousand Island Steamboat company, General Manager Howard S. Folger signalled the return of the steamer and Capt. Allan made another landing to great joy of the belated travellers.
