VISION OF LIBERTY MAN RE-ARRESTED AT THE PRISON GATES.

Served Four Years for Embezzlement—Now Charged With Theft of $500 Package at Nepeawa, Man.

G. C. Metcalfe, formerly a C. P. R. operator at Sault Ste. Marie, was released from the penitentiary at noon, after serving a term of four years for embezzlement. At the penitentiary gate he was met by Constable Bateson, who arrested him on a warrant of two years standing, the charge being the theft of a five hundred dollar package from the Dominion Express company, at Nepeawa. The prisoner was taken to the police station to await the arrival of officers from Manitoba.

Four years ago, Metcalfe, a man of good family, and married, got traveling at too fast a pace, and used the funds of the company that employed him. Four years in penitentiary was the sentence given him. Two years ago, a Nepeawa charge was laid against him, and the warrant for his arrest has been lying here ever since. The hour of his release was known, and the unfortunate man had only against him, and the warrant for his arrest has been lying here ever since.

Metcalfe was a model prisoner in the penitentiary, and was highly regarded by the officials under whose direction he performed some of the important clerical work of the institution. He knew of the second charge against him, but didn't dream that he was to be so soon recalled upon to answer for it.

Only yesterday he spoke of the joy that he was to experience by being enabled on Saturday night to rejoin his wife and little family in St. John, N.B., where they have resided since the dark shadow fell upon their former happy home.

Metcalfe declares that he is innocent of the charges which he will now have to face in Manitoba, and is confident that he can prove his innocence. He never was in Nepeawa in his life, he says, and knows nothing about the stolen money package. It is said that he would have been paroled long ago if his good conduct, only for this other charge.

Metcalfe was allowed the freedom of the Nepeawa police station, not being put in the mill. He sat through the afternoon, quietly smoking cigars, reading or looking "out upon the Market Square" from the open, but barred windows. He is a tall, rather good-looking man of thirty-five years of age. He wore a natty blue serge suit and straw hat. He seems, indeed, a gentleman in every respect.

There is a possibility that Metcalfe will appear in police court to-morrow morning, and be committed for trial at Nepeawa. He will then remain in the county jail until constables arrive from the western town.

ODDFELLOWS' RELIEF. Reference to the Work Being Done in Alberta.

From the report of the Odd Fellows' Relief Association, in yesterday's paper, there were two omissions. The first was regarding the local board of Manitoba, which acts for the board of directors in a limited capacity. It pointed out that seven new lodges had been organized in Manitoba during the year, and eleven in Saskatchewan, from which the association had experienced a large amount of new business. The work of Special Agent Rose was particularly commended because of the eight new lodges which had been instituted in the two provinces, fifteen had been brought into the association, and the percentage of the receipts was paid to the beneficiaries during the financial year. Excellent work was done in Alberta under the direction of the superintendent of agencies, H. J. Mackay, and the indication was that the order as well as the association will experience growing times in these two new provinces in the immediate future.

The superintendent of agencies, in his report, referred to the increased business done during the financial year ending with June 30th, 1905, as compared with the business done during the year ending with June 30th, 1904. The 20,000 mark had been passed, and with all confidence he rejoiced in the future vista of promise which lay open before the association. He had travelled during the year in connection with the association, and through several of the provinces, a distance of 17,419 miles. The grand lodge of Ontario had appropriated a certain sum for missionary work, following the precedent set in the year before, and the grand master decided to continue the plan pursued of having the association work in harmony with the grand lodge in its performance of work which is mutually advantageous to them. Taking instructions from the superintendent of agencies, three of the special agents visited various points in the province, and as a result the grand lodge of Ontario had secured six new lodges, and one lodge had been reconstituted. In addition to the assistance of Special Agent Tully, in about ten weeks seven new lodges had been instituted, and a large amount of new business contributed to the association.

Throughout the west there was a development which meant much for the grand lodge of Alberta and for the association, and if the latter is able in future as in the past to occupy the field as it becomes ripe for work it means a great increase of business to the association. They followed a list of the new lodges, which were instituted in the several provinces, largely through the instrumentality of the agents of the relief association, and the whole constituted a very creditable record.

Most of the members of the relief association, who were in the city in attendance at the annual meeting of the association, have returned to their homes.

MORE WIFE-BEATING. It is Getting Too Common in the City.

And still another instance of family unpleasantness and wife-beating must be chronicled. These midnight disturbances are getting altogether too common, and reflect no credit upon the city. Last night about half past twelve o'clock, the quiet stillness of the new-born home was rudely broken by cries for help, coming from the vicinity of the general hospital. "Murdering me," "come quick," "help," resounded loudly, and brought many nearby residents to their windows to ascertain the cause of the commotion. The scene of the fray was directly in front of the nurses' home on O'Kill street, though the principals resided around the corner on King street. Heavily laden with his wife, the man talking to his wife and daughter under the electric light, at the corner of O'Kill and George streets, and the two women ran away from him, but he overtook them and made a brutal attack upon them. At any rate their cries of terror aroused the whole neighborhood. Two residents of the vicinity, after being attracted to the scene, walked around the block and when passing the man's home, on King street, found him being unconscious by the door step. They took him into the house, and stayed till he revived. The women were nowhere to be seen, but had either gone to neighbors' homes or secured themselves upstairs. The man in the case was at work again this morning, but the citizens will not stand a repetition of the happenings of last night.

ECHO ANSWERS? Why should Peterboro be asked to provide a normal school site? Doesn't it seem a little infra dig. that the greatest government, of the greatest province of the greatest country, with a great big surplus and a finance minister who makes ninety-six cents do the work of a dollar, go begging for a free site for some speculative industrial exploiter?

A WONDERFUL LAND GREAT PROGRESS OF ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

The English Are the Commercial Power—A New People Being Formed.

Jose J. Garibay, in the New York Post.

The Argentine people are largely Spanish, in fact, wholly so, up to about fifty years ago. They received a large share of Irish immigration in the years that the Irish first flocked to America in large numbers. The introduction of the steamship into commerce brought them an influx of many races, for by the steamboats the grain, wheat and cattle ranches were brought into fairly quick communication with European markets.

Thousands of middle-class Spaniards, impoverished at home, have flocked to Argentina in the last few years. Numbers of Boers, in the last year or two, have settled in the southern part of the peninsula, an agricultural country like the one they have left. They are making sturdy and independent citizens. Italians from the northern part of Italy, from the farming towns by the mountains, are attracted to the Argentine republic, by the offer of free farm lands. Germans come next in proportion and have early intermarried with Spanish families. The English, though few in proportion of all the immigrants, have made themselves felt most of all the people who have come into this Spanish race. They are the men of the greatest influence in the state next to the Spaniards. And this is due to their taste for commerce.

Handling a large share of the immense exports of beef and grain, the republic seems to England and the continent, concerned in railroads or in domestic trade, they have become one of the great powers of the country. Though they have not assimilated so readily as the other races, they have intermarried to some extent with the Spaniards and other peoples.

One good reason why the English are prominent in commercial enterprises in the Argentine Republic is because the Latin still has a scorn of trade. It is still rather beneath his dignity to go into business. But this aversion has its good side, for the prominent men of the city, imbued with the Latin spirit, engage fervently in politics. They take their interest in public matters, and their sons look forward to some form of public life in the same manner in which the young Anglo-Saxon is usually started in some business at home. Public spirit prevails the atmosphere. The eyes of all the city of Buenos Ayres, for instance, are turned to the young Anglo-Saxon who acts as he is going to do for the city, and it is his policy to show a public spirit, as it was once the policy of the Czarist. For the last few years, a prize of $50,000 has been offered to the architect of the most beautiful building erected during the year. An other public enterprise was dredging the harbor of the city.

The mouth of the Platte river, on which the city of Buenos Ayres is situated, though offering an excellent harbor, fills every few years with the mud that washes down from upriver. Millions of dollars were spent when the city was last dredged, a year or two ago. Whereas, fifty years ago, the great harbor in Argentina, in order to land at Buenos Ayres, had to embark from the ocean liner on a small ship, and for that take a dory, and then, before the mud had washed down from upriver, the great harbor is, to-day, built out with wharves and filled with an amount of shipping second to New York only in this hemisphere. But more than this dredging, her citizens have constructed an immense canal in order to get out of the way of the tide, and to get into the city, filled with stonework and cement, circles parallel to the harbor line, and broadens out into two immense lagoons. And down this canal and its great locks the ships of commerce pass and discharge their cargoes at the wharves and load again from the elevators by the banks. So Buenos Ayres has two water fronts.

But though the Latin is politically minded, he is not sociologically inclined as is the colder Anglo-Saxon. In the beautiful city of Buenos Ayres, with its work of public enterprise, there is nothing which corresponds to our city settlements or organized charities. The Anglo-Saxon, as Mr. Cook phrases it, is a public enterprise, a position so that he could work like a man. While the Anglo-Saxon is not so concerned in government as he is in politics, the Latin is not so concerned in government as he is in politics. If an employee on a street car in the United States forgets his passengers while he jokes with his friends on the car, his neglect is not often complained of. By the Latin race, as represented in Argentina, such a falling would result pretty quickly in the employee's losing his place. And the new streets in this hemisphere, which crop up so many and often in the United States, would have been hissed and tormented out of their first experience and a people largely Latin in spirit. These two races, the busy, calm Anglo-Saxon and the fervent Latin, are being welded together in the Argentine people.

It is estimated that $2,000 changed hands.

AN EXCITING MOMENT. Serpent Attacked Boat of Architect and Contractor.

The tale of the sea serpent as related in the Whig some time ago, seems to be the recipient of confirmatory evidence in some shape or form from day to day. However, the following testimony from citizens of the neighborhood of the Dead Man's Bay and the shores of the point. The story speaks for itself.

The other afternoon a prominent government architect and a retired contractor were out fishing in the neighborhood referred to. Trolling was the more specific form of amusement in which they were indulging at the time referred to. The architect was the other when suddenly the former was rudely startled by cries of alarm from the ex-contractor. Both were rather too much excited to know just whom the animal looked like, but coming straight for the gentleman in the stern seat was a monstrous serpent of some kind, with long wriggling body, and an immense head. Its jaws were wide open and an inviting set of molars showed conspicuously. The architect seized an oar. He had not time to turn it, and apply the handle, so hit the animal fairly in the head with the blade. It disappeared, and the fisherman didn't stay long in those waters, but pulled away as fast as one could, and broken birds of another world flew. Ald. Bassam claims he has found the sea serpent, which dominates Dead Man's Bay, or rather the cause of the illusion. He claims it is Ald. Carson's cow. When the representatives of Victoria ward retired for the night at his summer cottage, he forgot to lower one of the windows leading to a room on the ground floor. About midnight he was awakened by loud noises and on going to investigate found his colleague's cow with its head protruding through the window. Before he had time to seize the animal away, one of the bolts became
