The Plunge Is Made.

The Bannerman government has launched its scheme of self-government for the Transvaal. In this it has no been governed by sentimental reasons. Nor has it, as Balfour asserts, been merely anxious to free itself from anti-election entanglements. The Brit ish in the Transvaal, and in Rand, are very largely in the major ity, and they have been pressing for the functions they could not get with out legislative enactment. The Rand has been suffering, commercially. Canada did before 1896, and the feel ing has prevailed that with local power to deal with business propositions a new era was in store for the colony. parliament, and the response which with the Sunday bill, but they has been made in the bill which has see the wisdom of letting pass the lords for their consideration. There will be the check of a crown appointed senate or upper tric lighting business in Galt, at house has hit upon a plan of equit able and popular representation.

The fear is perhaps too much entertained that the Transvaal is not to e trusted, that sufficient time has not elapsed since the war to warrant the belief that the spirit of rebellion has been completely snuffed out. But the colony, or province, can never be fairly governed as it is now. A be ginning on progressive reforms, social sooner the better. Time will demonstrate the wisdom of the government's policy, and the British at home should trust the British in the Transvaal in the attempt to work out their destiny with fear and trembling. Certain if is that the course of the opposition is not loyal and praiseworthy. It does not appeal to the nobler instincts of the race, but to the passions of the Boers. It would appear to be willing which would make self-government feeling and irritation and adverse criticism for the Bannerman govern-
