The Life Of Parsifal.

He is taken in by the knights, and witnesses the ceremonies of the Grail, watening with especial interest the scene suggesting the last supper. As he gazes in amazement, Gurnemanz an old anight, takes a dislike to him and drives nim forth.

It is only a short distance to the wonderful garden of Klingsor, and there l'arsital is surrounded by the bevy of bewitching flower maidens. There, too, he meets Kundry, who reveals to him his identity, and calls him by his name for the first time Enraged at his intrusion, Klings or hurls his spear at Parsifal; but the weapon unable to penetrate the protection of his purity, stops in midair above his head. Parsifal then catches up the spear, makes the sign of the the cross, and Klingsor's palace crash-

Many years are supposed to pass before the third act opens upon a Good Friday. Parsifal has passed through many experiences in his efforts to relieve Amfortas, who still suffers from his wound. Kundry now thoroughly repentant, encounters the exhausted Parsifal and bathes his blistered feet. The two are baptized by Gurnemanz, Parsifal touches the wound of Amfortas with the holy spear and it is healed. The Grail is then uncovered, and the opera ends with a splendid chorus of boyish voices wafted down from the dome to the temple.

"Accompanied by the beautiful m sic and the pageantry of scenery and costumes," writes an admirer of the opera, "this succession of scenes makes a profound impression on one who sees and hears the work. "He cannot fall, if he has the love of music in his heart, to be submitted to the spell that Wagner has wound about the music surging through this drama with such a wondrous eloquence, tenderness, dazzling beauty, and spiritual uplift."

Having even a higher conception the work, regarding it as a sacred thing, Frau Wagner revolted from the idea of its presentation upon the dinary stage, and she cannot forgive Miss Weed for having engaged in American "desegration."

DANGER IN DRILL.

Managers Fear Military Practices Threaten Empire.

London, Aug. 16 .- The managers of the London county council schools at Lewisham have discovered a new danger to the empire. It is military

They noticed that the children joyed being drilled, and that they of ten-the boys at least-played at beng soldiers after school hours. By some method of reasoning which they have not explained, the managers of the schools felt that this was, in their own words, "contrary to true spirit of patriotism," and they expressed regret to the council that the playgrounds of the schools should be used for drilling the children of their love for their country,

The council has not yet decided what to do in the matter.

Klingsor endeavors to encompass the fact that more vigorous exercise and sports are engaged in than here-tofore. While golfing, boating, tennis the fact that more vigorous exercise and automobiling have been summer amusements for seasons past, still they were never engaged in to such an extent as now, and for this reason the sporting girl looks around for the coolest she can find.
