A nativa society called the "Silent

nes" murdered Commissioner Crewe Captain Wayling, with an expedition of native troops, was sent to recover the body, but he was wounded in the first encounter, several of his men were killed, and thirty-one wounded, and he was compelled to ask for reinforcements. Capt. Rudkin, with another native force, was hurried to his assistance, and after heavy fighting succeeded in relieving Wayling. The combined British force then vigorously attacked the native town though taken by surprise, fought with great courage. The severe fighting and heavy rains caused the British a loss of twenty-five dead and one hundred wounded.
